"The Jewish people," the commissioners say, "have a peculiar claim upon the missionary activities of the Christian church. Christianity is theirs pre-eminently by right of inheritance.

The various missionary organizations are advised to get into close touch with each other, and learn of each others' methods. The formation of an international committee to take up consideration of the whole question is urged on the conference.

N. P. Rowell, K.C., Toronto, has been appointed recording clerk of the congress.

INQUEST ON MRS. RIDDELL

Norwich, June 16.—At the inquest yesterday on the body of Mrs. (Dr.) Riddell, who was found dead on the dining-room floor by her husband, ten witnesses were examined by Coroner Ellis. All testified that Dr. Riddell and his wife had always lived happily together, also that Mrs. Riddell was in good spirits thirty minutes before her decease.

Dr. Riddell established clearly the fact that he had been away all day, from 10 a.m. until 9 p.m.

GOVERNOR GILLETT SENDS WORD TO STOP THE FIGHT

San Francisco, Cal., June 16.—Stirred to action by protests from all parts of the state and country, Governor James R. Gillett yesterday took steps to prevent the championship fight between James J. Jeffries and Jack Johnson, scheduled to be held in San Francisco on July 4.

In a letter to Attorney-General U. S. Webb the governor yesterday expressed his disapproval of prize-fighting and directed that the courts be invoked to prevent the match. He concluded with a positive order, that in case a plea for a restraining order be not granted and the fight be held, the Attorney-General prosecute those interested in the fight for violation of the penal code of the state.

He resurrects an old law, section 412 in the penal code, that prohibits prize-fighting, but which has never defined a prize fight, an opportunity be now given to do so. This is taken to indicate the governor's intention to press his opposition to the end. While the status of the fight is unsettled, the sporting fraternity is much cast down, and it is generally believed that the death knell of prize-fighting in California has been sounded.

This belief is borne out by the fact that the governor telegraphed to Attorney-General Webb later in the day to take similar action as to the fight scheduled for June 18 in San Francisco between Sam Langford and Al Kaufman.

Promoters Tex Rickard and John Gleason had heard no whisper of the governor's intended action. When the news reached him, Rickard rushed to the office of Attorney-General Webb and asked what that officer proposed to do. After a conference with Webb Rickard said he believed that the fight would be held in San Francisco on the advertised date despite the governor's orders. Rickard would not say what his course would be until the court handed down a decision, but he had no intention of abandoning the effort to hold the fight here. Both he and Gleason devoted much time yesterday to conferences with their attorney. The course of legal defence decided on probably will not be given out until Mr. Webb has made a statement.

Rickard said Webb had promised him, because of the great expense of erecting the arena and other matters connected with the fight, that his opinion would be forthcoming without delay. Rickard expects it within two days. In the meantime Rickard says he will prepare to take the fight to Nevada or Utah, if compelled to leave California.

Just what will be the nature of the legal proceedings is not known. The governor's letter is positive in directing that the courts be asked to intervene and urging a definition of prize-fighting by the Supreme Court. For this reason it is believed that Mr. Webb will apply for a writ bringing all parties before that court for a hearing and procuring a temporary injunction, pending a decision. By this step he would avoid delay, since the promoters would have to appeal if judgment were rendered against them.

When word of the governor's order reached Ben Lomond Jeffries refused to believe it. The camp was thrown into an uproar by the message, but Jeffries, after declaring his disbelief, retired to his cottage and was found there later sound asleep.

Rickard estimates that he will lose $30,000 if he is forced to take the fight to Nevada. He said he would consider Reno and Ely, Nev., and Salt Lake City. He is said to favor the Utah capital. Work on the arena which has progressed rapidly since it was started about two weeks ago, was ordered suspended temporarily when asked for a statement.

He said the governor had "heeded the clamor of the mob," and made satirical reference to "political capital." "However," he concluded, "I still believe that the fight will be held here, as the courts are more powerful than the governor."

"Will Fight," Says Mayor.

Chicago, Ills., June 16.—"I am running San Francisco. I am taking no orders from Gillett or his Attorney-General. You can bet your last dollar that the big fight will be pulled off in my town just as advertised."

Mayor Pat McCarthy of San Francisco, stepping from depot to depot yesterday to catch a Pacific coast flyer, delivered this ultimatum just after scurrying through the sporting extras, which had announced that Governor Gillett of California had issued orders through the Attorney-General's office that the Jeffries-Johnston battle must be pulled off outside the boundary lines of the Golden State.

MARINE POSTOFFICE VERY SUCCESSFUL

Detroit, June 16.—Yesterday was the fifteenth anniversary of the establishment of the marine postoffice at Detroit. The Detroit River is the only place in the United States, if not in the world, where a Government maintains a floating postoffice, and the success of this one has led to its improvement.

In 1885, the year it was started, the total mail handled for the season amounted to 46,478 pieces; last month alone there were delivered and collected 105,345 pieces of mail, and May isn't much of a month for navigation at that.

McAdam May Recover.

Oshawa, June 16.—John McAdam, who was stabbed Tuesday evening by his brother-in-law, Benjamin Sheridan, is being cared for at his home in Celina street.

The wound was not as bad as at first reported, and McAdam, whose death was feared at first, will in all likelihood, live.

It seems the blade struck a rib and was deflected along the chest as far as can be told yet, the thorax was not penetrated and unless complications set in he will recover.

HAS RESIGNED HIS PORTFOLIO

London, June 16.—Viscount Wolverhampton sent to Premier Asquith yesterday his resignation as Lord President of the Council.

The viscount gives ill-health as the reason for surrendering his portfolio, but it is known that he is a persistent opponent of Chancellor Lloyd-George's budget. He was eighty years of age last month and has been Lord President of the Council since 1908.

Jury Was Lenient.

Fort Frances, June 16.—John Byrnes, who shot his wife twice in the head and brutally kicked her after the shooting, was found guilty of common assault only, the jury apparently thinking there was some provocation. Judge Finch sentenced him to nine months in the jail at Rainy River, the scene of the crime.

BOTHA STATES HIS POLICY

Pretoria, June 16.—Premier Botha in declaring his policy, said there was no other way possible than to form [illegible] already existing. Other steps would have been most fatal to South Africa. Investigations clearly proved that the majority did not wish for a coalition ministry. The time had come [illegible] He hoped the old party organizations, especially his own, would be dissolved and amalgamated into a great party with broad, wide principles, the South African National party.

HELL

The Toronto Methodist conference was in hot water last week. They were discussing hell, and the views of some clergy who did not believe in it, and who further thought that Jonah and the whale was allegorical, and that Adam and Eve were only fine figures of speech.

The days of Jonathan Edwards and the Wesley's seem past. They preached hell fire without ice water, and men hung to their seats in terror as Edwards portrayed the angry God. But now-a-days hell seems frozen over, Genesis is no longer a truth, but splendid literature, and Christ no more divine, but merely a Master Man.

The matter has been referred to the general conference, and will make interesting reading.

HOMERS

Our correspondent from Millbrook writes of one hundred and forty-four homing pigeons that were released to fly from there to New York. The mystery of instinct is beyond our finite minds, and by just what process the homer finds his loft, the robin his southern home and the oriole the forests of Brazil, none can ever write. But a man in the forest who knows city streets best, and he is at once as helpless as a child, for he is a man and trusts to reason. But the question is no puzzle to a dog. What is this mystery? Once in a while we come across some wisehead who thinks he knows it all, but who cannot explain the mystery of the loaf of bread, and the growth of the wheat that made it possible.

The oriole hangs his nest in the tree, the red winged starling binds rushes together and builds over the water in the pond, the kingfisher or swallow disappear in a hole in the sand bank as perfectly round as if made by caliper. Yet some of us cannot nail a board on straight.

THE SOLDIER.

The cannon are sounding at Petawawa and the bugles are calling at Niagara, and thousands of men are learning how best to blow each other's brains out. Some day there may be trouble and a regiment of good Canadians will then line up against the stranger, and render them individual carcases or become individual carcases themselves.

But the bugle is calling everywhere to daily battle. The enemy is no imaginary one and all have known defeat. But we are not solitary, our neighbor is in the same plight, and our neighbor is the man we met yesterday, the man we meet to-day and will meet to-morrow.

"Quick march," and at these camps at Niagara and Petawawa men will move forward to the word of command. But most of us in this daily battle are only marking time. The clerk has no patience in waiting on customers who are hard to suit, but he doesn't mind selling to the man or woman who know what they want. But this clerk is paid to be patient with the impatient, to be obliging to the unobliging, and the crank.

Look at the great host of halted ones on the plains of life. They are halted because it suits them best. For them there is no mystery in the future to search out, there are no pleasures but the present, no unfolding world for them. They are marking time. And the world's crying out "Wanted, a man." But they could not help them because they are halted. And among this halted host are the politicians who evade the real questions of the day, and ministers halted by church doctrines and creed and formality, lawyers bound by procedure, and doctors by the traditions of the profession, the customs of the hour.

Yes, wanted men, men who understand the value to their franchise, who understand that every vote is the price of blood, as Ex-Judge Doherty pointed out at the Campbellford picnic on Tuesday, men who value their heritage as coming from our forefathers who fought the Indians, who fought the wild beasts, who fought back the forests, cleared the land and established government.

Here and there are those who have broken away from the great body of halted ones, men who have something to say, who are not the echo, but the voice, men who are fighting for right against the wrongs of the day. They are men who are moving steadily forward and bringing all their energies to bear upon the accomplishment of that which possesses them.

LORD OF THE ROYAL BEDCHAMBER

Lord Annaly will still have his old job, which must be very gratifying. He has been re-appointed Lord of the Royal Bedchamber, this important bit of news having been cabled across the ocean. It is to be hoped that he understands tucking in the sheets and that he is conversant with the art of shaking up the pillow so that His Majesty George Five may have pleasant sleep.

The Lord of the Royal Bedchamber is to be congratulated.

Are there as many jobs going around the royal castles as there are at Ottawa? It is very doubtful, for the Dominion Treasuries are very generous.

The I.C.R. can always take the ardent worker who is financially embarrassed, and get him a berth where he may be safely embalmed, or perhaps it is the ardent worker's friend, or his friend's friend who need the little boost, for must not freight be checked, and have not wheels to be tapped at so much a tap, and must not switches be turned and station furniture dusted. Then there is the Welland Canal, and the Rideau and other canals, and the Newmarket canal may overflow its banks. Have not lamps to be lit and bridges turned and swept. The mouths of rivers will fill up and harbors must be kept deep. Dredges must dredge and contractors cannot work at a loss.

Our borders must be watched.

Has the immigrant a pimple on his nose? Turn him back, he is undesirable. The population of Canada must not be crowded.

We have no royal bedchamber to keep, but then there's lots of other odd jobs going.

THE PENNY BANK.
Sentinel-Review, Woodstock.

The way seems now cleared for the establishing of a Penny Bank in connection with the public school system of Woodstock. Both the teachers and the members of the board of education, judging from the report of th elittle luncheon the other day at which they were the guests of Dr. MacMurchy, are unanimous in favor of the proposal.

UNDERGROUND NEW YORK.

Quicksands That Make Trouble In Building Operations.

The rock surface of Manhattan Island slopes from north to south and passes below the tide level at about Tenth street. From this point south and below the water level the island consists of a great blanket of sand and silt deposits, built up on the underlying rock by the tides and currents of recent geologic times. Beds of clay and sand vary in thickness, and in some places the clay does not appear at all. The sands vary to a considerable degree, from the coarsest gravel to the most treacherous quicksands.

To give an idea of the fineness of this sand some samples were passed through sieves with meshes of various sizes and finally through a 200 mesh sieve, the openings of which are about .035 of an inch in width. From 20 to 37 per cent passed through the 200 mesh sieve. Little may we wonder, then, that such fine material when saturated with water should flow as readily as water itself, passing through every crevice and seeking its level just like any liquid. Herein lies the reason for the difficulties encountered in excavating in quicksands, for should pumping be resorted to in order to drain a pit of water this fine material will invariably be pumped with the water and if the pumping be continued will finally be drawn from under adjoining structures, eventually undermining them.

What is probably the oldest piece of wood in existence was found overlying the bedrock at a depth of about forty feet below the street level on the site of the United States Express building in Greenwich street and was covered by a stratum of hardpan about eleven feet thick, above which was a layer of quicksand and muck about thirty feet thick. The specimen of wood is slightly brown in color and is believed to have belonged to a now extinct species of cedar. As there was no way in which the wood could have been brought into this niche in the bedrock after the hardpan stratum had been deposited by the glaciers it is evident that the tree of which this specimen formed a part had been growing before the glacial epoch.—Harper's Weekly.

Electrically Cured Meat.

A Cleveland packer explained a new process of curing meat recently to a convention of packers. With electricity, he said, he could do in from three to twenty-five days what under the old salt pickle system takes from 25 to 105 days. The discovery came about in this way: About ten years ago a man was testing an electric motor, using a vat of salt and water as a makeshift rheostat. One of the electrodes in the vat was weighted down with a brick, which after the test crumbled in the hand like dry cake. The electricity had driven the salt particles into and through the brick. As he was interested in the packing business, the experimenter wondered if electricity couldn't drive salt into meat. He tried it, and a great meat curing plant has been erected in Cleveland.—Collier's.

A Taxicab Economy.

"I'm pinning on my braid," said the young woman who had been called to the telephone. "Oh, about twenty minutes, I guess."

"That is a trick," she said, "that came in with taxicabs. A man going anywhere with a woman in an old fashioned cab would have squandered half a week's salary before he would telephone to her about the stage of her toilet. But with taxicabs it is different. They eat up money faster than the old cabs, and it is nothing unusual now for an escort to ask how much longer it will take to get ready. Within fifteen or twenty minutes of the time set he calls a taxi and gets here just as you are going downstairs. Not very romantic, no, but it's sensible and saves money."—New York Sun.

Umbrella Sails.

Experiments have been made in England with a new kind of sail for boats. The sail when spread resembles a large umbrella. The mast, occupying a position similar to that of the stick in an umbrella, turns upon a pivot at the bottom. It is usually inclined about forty-five degrees to the horizon, but the inclination can be adjusted to suit the force of the wind. The inventors claim that with this sail "heeling of the boat" can be avoided, while at the same time the sail tends to lift the boat and thus enables it more easily to mount the waves.—Harper's Weekly.

Doesn't Sigh For Youth.

A person who would stand before you and advise you to get the most out of youth—that it is the happiest season of your life—is not telling you the truth. You grow happier as you get older. As I stand before you young folks I don't envy any one of you your youth. I had as fine a time as you when I was young, but I would not go back to my youth for anything. I'm much happier now. I really believe that by the time I'm eighty I'll be having the time of my life.—Professor William Lyon Phelps of Yale.

The Housefly.

Concerning his experience while studying the life and habits of the housefly, Henry Hill, a lecturer, states: "I wish I could explain why a fly never walks down, but always up, a clean window pane and why, on the other hand, it will walk down the slanting glass front of a picture. It is also a mystery to me why a fly always rests head downward on a wall. These are habits of the housefly which offer a field for interesting study."

The death is announced of George Atchison, R. A., past president of the Royal Institutes of British Architects.

CATTLE MARKETS.

Cattle Slow and Irregular—Hogs Active and Firm.

Montreal Live Stock.

MONTREAL, June 15.—(Special.)—At the Canadian Pacific live stock market this morning the offerings of live stock were 700 cattle, 725 sheep and lambs, 650 hogs and 1200 calves. There was no change in the condition of the market for cattle, prices being firmly maintained under a good demand and limited supplies. Choice steers were scarce; in fact, there were none on the market; consequently the top price made for the best offered was 7½c, and the lower grades sold at from that down to 6½c per lb. The demand for cows was good, and sales were made at from 4¾c to 5¼c per lb., and the range for bulls was from 4c to 6c per lb. A more active trade was done in small meats on account of the fact that the receipts of all lines were much larger than they have been for some time past. The demand was good and prices ruled firm, with sales of old sheep at 4¾c to 6½c per lb.; lambs at from $5 to $7 each, and calves at $5 to $7 each. A weaker feeling developed in the market for hogs, and prices declined 25c per hundred lbs., owing to the increased offerings, and sales of selected lots were made at $9.75 to $10 per 100 lbs., weighed off cars.

At the Montreal Stock Yards West End Market the receipts amounted to 450 cattle, 50 sheep and lambs, 500 hogs and 200 calves. There was no important change in the condition of the market for any line, and a fair trade was done.

Author of the Miller Bill.

On account of the very general interest aroused throughout the Dominion by the long and hard-fought struggle in the Canadian Parliament over the bill to abolish gambling on the race track, many people who have never met or ever seen the author of the bill, Mr. Henry Horton Miller, M.P., are naturally curious to know what kind of man this is, who has succeeded in putting up such a stiff fight for his measure that the recognized political parties, and even the Ministry itself, have been divided, with a final result that the closest division ever recorded in the Commons was reached, the bill being just defeated by a majority of one, and that although many of the most powerful debaters and strongest party leaders on both sides were against the measure. In personal appearance, Mr. Miller is exactly the type of a man who would be expected to promote such a bill and to fight to the last ditch to secure its passage. Tall, gaunt, rather ungainly in figure and carriage, with a set "dour" face and a heavy, determined-looking jaw, he might pose without make-up for a Cromwellian trooper or a member of the Roundhead Parliament. You cannot hear him speak in Parliament, or engage in five minutes conversation with him, without being convinced that he is a man of cast-steel convictions, and possessed of determination to carry out anything he undertakes to do, if it can be done. He is a good, practical speaker too; not an orator, but a user of plain blunt language which expresses just what he means. The bill was certainly pushed for all it was worth in Mr. Miller's hands, and if he does not bring it up again, and secure its adoption, those who know him well will be surprised. Mr. Miller, who represents South Grey in the House of Commons, is the son of a father of Scotch and American descent brought up in Canada, and of a Canadian mother of Irish descent. Owen Sound was his native place, and he was born in 1861. He lives at Hanover, Ont., where he is a dealer in real estate. He is a Methodist and actively interested in the local church and in the governing body of that denomination.

The Mystery of The Yellow Room

By GASTON LEROUX

COPYRIGHT, 1908, BY BRENTANO'S

"Yes; there is a window or, rather, skylight in it, which, as it looks out toward the country, M. Stangerson has had barred, like the rest of the windows. These bars, as in the other windows, have remained intact, and the blinds, which naturally open inward, have not been unfastened. For the rest, we have not discovered anything to lead us to suspect that the murderer had passed through the attic."

"It seems clear to you, then, monsieur, that the murderer escaped—nobody knows how—by the window in the vestibule?"

"Everything goes to prove it."

"I think so, too," confessed Rouletabille gravely.

After a brief silence he continued:

"If you have not found any traces of the murderer in the attic, such as the dirty footmarks similar to those on the floor of the yellow room, you must come to the conclusion that it was not he who stole Daddy Jacques' revolver."

"There are no footmarks in the attic other than those of Daddy Jacques himself," said the magistrate with a significant turn of his head. Then, after an apparent decision, he added, "Daddy Jacques was with M. Stangerson in the laboratory, and it was lucky for him he was."

"Then what part did his revolver play in the tragedy? It seems very clear that this weapon did less harm to Mlle. Stangerson than it did to the murderer."

The magistrate made no reply to this question, which doubtless embarrassed him. "M. Stangerson," he said, "tells us that the two bullets have been found in the yellow room, one embedded in the wall stained with the impression of a red hand—a man's large hand—and the other in the ceiling."

He puffed awhile in silence at his pipe, enveloping himself in the smoke. When we reached Epinay-sur-Orge I had to tap him on the shoulder to arouse him from his dream and come out on to the platform of the station.

There the magistrate and his registrar bowed to us and, by rapidly getting into a cab that was awaiting them, made us understand that they had seen enough of us.

"How long will it take to walk to the Chateau du Glandier?" Rouletabille asked one of the railway porters.

"An hour and a half or an hour and three-quarters—easy walking," the man replied.

Rouletabille looked up at the sky and, no doubt finding its appearance satisfactory, took my arm and said:

"Come on! I need a walk. It was a bit of luck our falling in with that examining magistrate and his registrar, eh? What did I tell you about that revolver?"

His head was bent down, he had his hands in his pockets, and he was whistling. After awhile I heard him murmur:

"Poor woman!"

"Is it Mlle. Stangerson you are pitying?"

"Yes. She's a noble woman and worthy of being pitied—a woman of a great, a very great, character, I imagine—I imagine."

"You know her, then?"

"Not at all. I have never seen her but once."

"Why, then, do you say that she is a woman of great character?"

"Because she bravely faced the murderer, because she courageously defended herself, and, above all, because of the bullet in the ceiling."

CHAPTER IV.

"In the Bosom of Wild Nature."

THE Chateau du Glandier is one of the oldest chateaux in the Ile de France, where so many building remains of the feudal period are still standing. Built originally in the heart of the forest in the reign of Philip le Bel, it now could be seen a few hundred yards from the road leading from the village of Sainte-Genevieve to Monthery. A mass of inharmonious structures, it is dominated by a donjon.

It was in this place, seemingly belonging entirely to the past, that Professor Stangerson and his daughter installed themselves to lay the foundations for the science of the future.

When M. Stangerson bought the estate, fifteen years before the tragedy with which we are engaged occurred, the Chateau du Glandier had for a long time been unoccupied. Another old chateau in the neighborhood, built in the fourteenth century by Jean de Belmont, was also abandoned, so that that part of the country was very little inhabited. Some small houses on the side of the road leading to Corbeil, an inn, called the Auberge du Donjon, which offered passing hospitality to wagoners—these were about all to represent civilization in this out of the way part of the country, but a few leagues from the capital.

But this deserted condition of the place had been the determining reason for the choice made by M. Stangerson and his daughter. M. Stangerson was already celebrated. He had returned from America, where his works had made a great stir. The book which he had published at Philadelphia, on the "Dissociation of Matter by Electric Action," had aroused opposition throughout the whole scientific world. M. Stangerson was a Frenchman, but of American origin. Important matters relating to a legacy had kept him for several years in the United States, where he had continued the work begun by him in France, whither he had returned in possession of a large fortune.

Mlle. Stangerson was at the time when her father returned from America and bought the Glandier estate twenty years of age. She was exceedingly pretty, having at once the Parisian grace of her mother, who had died in giving her birth, and all the splendor, all the riches of the young American blood of her parental grandfather, William Stangerson. A citizen of Philadelphia, William Stangerson had been obliged to become naturalized in obedience to family exigencies at the time of his marriage with a French lady.

Twenty years of age, a charming blond, with blue eyes, milk white complexion and radiant with divine health, Mathilde Stangerson was one of the most beautiful marriageable girls in either the old or the new world. It was her father's duty, in spite of the inevitable pain which a separation from her would cause him, to think of her marriage, and he was fully prepared for it. Nevertheless he buried himself and his child at the Glandier at the moment when his friends were expecting him to bring her out into society.

Questioned by her friends, the young girl replied calmly, "Where could we work better than in this solitude?" For Mlle. Stangerson had already begun to collaborate with her father in his work. It could not at the time be imagined that her passion for science would lead her so far as to refuse all the suitors who presented themselves to her for over fifteen years. The young girl's extreme reserve did not at first discourage suitors, but at the end of a few years they tired of their quest.

One alone persisted with tender tenacity and deserved the name of "eternal fiance," a name he accepted with melancholy resignation; that was M. Robert Darzac. Mlle. Stangerson was now no longer young, and it seemed that, having found no reason for marrying at five and thirty, she would never find one.

Suddenly some weeks before the events with which we are occupied a report—to which nobody attached any importance, so incredible did it sound—was spread about Paris that Mlle. Stangerson had at last consented to "crown" the inextinguishable flame of M. Robert Darzac! It needed that M. Robert Darzac himself should not deny this matrimonial rumor to give it an appearance of truth, so unlikely did it seem to be well founded. One day, however, M. Stangerson, as he was leaving the Academy of Science, announced that the marriage of his daughter and M. Robert Darzac would be celebrated in the privacy of the Chateau du Glandier as soon as he and his daughter had put the finishing touches to their report summing up their labors on the "Dissociation of Matter." The new household would install itself in the Glandier, and the son-in-law would lend his assistance in the work to which the father and daughter had dedicated their lives.

The scientific world had barely had time to recover from the effect of this news when it learned of the attempted assassination of mademoiselle.

CHAPTER V.

ROULETABILLE and I had been walking for several minutes by the side of a long wall bounding the vast property of M. Stangerson and had already come within sight of the entrance gate when our attention was drawn to an individual who, half bent to the ground, seemed to be so completely absorbed in what he was doing as not to have seen us coming toward him. At one time he stooped so low as almost to touch the ground. At another he drew himself up and attentively examined the wall. Then he looked into the palm of one of his hands and walked away with rapid strides. Finally he set off running, still looking into the palm of his hand. Rouletabille had brought me to a standstill by a gesture.

"Hush! Frederic Larsan is at work! Don't let us disturb him!"

Rouletabille had a great admiration for the celebrated detective. I had never before seen him, but I knew him well by reputation. At that time, before Rouletabille had given proof of his unique talent, Larsan was reputed as the most skillful unraveler of the most mysterious and complicated crimes. His reputation was worldwide, and the police of London and even of America often called him to their aid when their own national inspectors and detectives found themselves at the end of their wits and resources.

No one was astonished, then, that the head of the Paris police had at the outset of the mystery of the yellow room telegraphed his precious subordinate in London, where he had been sent on a big case of stolen securities, to return with all haste. Frederic had made all speed, doubtless knowing by experience that if he was interrupted in what he was doing it was because his services were urgently needed in another direction, so, as Rouletabille said, he was that morning already "at work." We soon found out in what it consisted.

What he was continually looking at in the palm of his right hand was nothing but his watch, the minute hand of which he appeared to be noting intently. Then he turned back, still running, stopping only when he reached the park gate, where he again consulted his watch and then put it away in his pocket, shrugging his shoulders with a gesture of discouragement. He pushed open the park gate, reclosed and locked it, raised his head and through the bars perceived us. Rouletabille rushed after him, and I followed. Frederic Larsan waited for us.

"M. Fred," said Rouletabille, raising his hat and showing the profound respect, based on admiration, which the young reporter felt for the celebrated detective, "can you tell me whether M. Robert Darzac is at the chateau at this moment? Here is one of his friends of the Paris bar, who desires to speak with him."

"I really don't know, M. Rouletabille," replied Fred, shaking hands with my friend, whom he had several times met in the course of his difficult investigations. "I have not seen him."

"The concierges will be able to inform us, no doubt?" said Rouletabille, pointing to the lodge, the door and windows of which were close shut.

"The concierges will not be able to give you any information, M. Rouletabille."

"Why not?"

"Because they were arrested half an hour ago."

"Arrested!" cried Rouletabille. "Then they are the murderers!"

Frederic Larsan shrugged his shoulders.

"When you can't arrest the real murderer," he said, with an air of supreme irony, "you can always indulge in the luxury of discovering accomplices."

"Did you have them arrested, M. Fred?"

"Not I! I haven't had them arrested. In the first place, I am pretty sure that they have not had anything to do with the [illegible] cause"—

"Because of what?" asked Rouletabille eagerly.

"Because of nothing," said Larsan, shaking his head.

"Because there were no accomplices!" said Rouletabille.

"Aha! You have an idea, then, about this matter?" said Larsan, looking at Rouletabille intently, "yet you have seen nothing, young man—you have not yet gained admission here!"

"I shall get admission."

"I doubt it. The orders are strict."

"I shall gain admission if you let me see M. Robert Darzac. Do that for me. You know we are old friends. I beg of you, M. Fred. Do you remember the article I wrote about you on the gold bar case?"

Larsan might be about fifty years of age. He had a fine head, his hair turning gray, a colorless complexion and a firm profile. His forehead was prominent, his chin and cheeks clean shaven. His upper lip, without mustache, was finely chiseled. His eyes were rather small and round, with a look in them that was at once searching and disquieting. He was of middle height and well built, with a general bearing elegant and gentlemanly.

Larsan turned his head at the sound of a vehicle which had come from the chateau and reached the gate behind him. We recognized the cab which had conveyed the examining magistrate and his registrar from the station at Epinay.

"Ah!" said Frederic Larsan. "If you want to speak with M. Robert Darzac, he is here."

The cab was already at the park gate, and Robert Darzac was begging Frederic Larsan to open it for him, explaining that he was pressed for time to catch the next train leaving Epinay for Paris. Then he recognized me. While Larsan was unlocking the gate M. Darzac inquired what had brought me to the Glandier at such a tragic moment. I noticed that he was frightfully pale and that his face was lined as if from the effects of some terrible suffering.

"Is mademoiselle getting better?" I immediately asked.

"Yes," he said. "She will be saved perhaps. She must be saved!"

He did not add "or it will be my death," but I felt that the phrase trembled on his pale lips.

Rouletabille intervened:

"You are in a hurry, monsieur, but I must speak with you. I have something of the greatest importance to tell you."

Frederic Larsan interrupted:

"May I leave you?" he asked of Robert Darzac. "Have you a key or do you wish me to give you this one?"

"Thank you. I have a key and will lock the gate."

Larsan hurried off in the direction of the chateau, the imposing pile of which could be perceived a few hundred yards away.

Robert Darzac, with knit brow, was beginning to show impatience. I presented Rouletabille as a good friend of mine, but as soon as he learned that the young man was a journalist he looked at me very reproachfully, excused himself under the necessity of having to reach Epinay in twenty minutes, bowed and whipped up his horse. But Rouletabille had seized the bridle and, to my utter astonishment, stopped the carriage with a vigorous hand. Then he gave utterance to a sentence which was utterly meaningless to me.

"The presbytery has lost nothing of its charm, nor the garden its brightness."

The words had hardly left the lips of Rouletabille than I saw Robert Darzac quail. Pale as he was, he became paler. His eyes were fixed on the young man in terror, and he immediately descended from the vehicle in an inexpressible state of agitation.

"Come—come in!" he stammered.

Then suddenly and with a sort of fury he repeated:

"Let us go, monsieur."

He turned up by the road he had come from the chateau, Rouletabille still retaining his hold on the horse's bridle. I addressed a few words to M. Darzac, but he made no answer. My looks questioned Rouletabille, but his gaze was elsewhere.

CHAPTER VI.

WE reached the chateau and, as we approached it, saw four gendarmes pacing in front of a little door in the ground floor of the donjon. We soon learned that in this ground floor, which had formerly served as a prison, M. and Mme. Bernier, the concierges, were confined.

M. Robert Darzac led us into the modern part of the chateau by a large door, protected by a projecting awning—a "marquise" as it is called. Rouletabille, who had resigned the horse and the cab to the care of a servant, never took his eyes off M. Darzac. I followed his look and perceived that it was directed solely toward the gloved hands of the Sorbonne professor. When we were in a tiny sitting room fitted with old furniture, M. Darzac turned to Rouletabille and said sharply:

"What do you want?"

The reporter answered in an equally sharp tone:

"To shake you by the hand."

Darzac shrank back.

"What does that mean?"

Evidently he understood, what I also understood, that my friend suspected him of the abominable attempt on the life of Mlle. Stangerson. The impression of the blood stained hand on the walls of the yellow room was in his mind. I looked at the man closely. His haughty face, with its expression ordinarily so straightforward, was at this moment strangely troubled. He held out his right hand and, referring to me, said:

"[illegible] friend of M. Sainclair, who has rendered me invaluable services in a just cause, monsieur, I see no reason for refusing you my hand"—

Rouletabille did not take the extended hand. Lying with the utmost audacity, he said:

"Monsieur, I have lived several years in Russia, where I have acquired the habit of never taking any but an ungloved hand."

I thought that the Sorbonne professor would express his anger openly, but, on the contrary, by a visibly violent effort, he calmed himself, took off his gloves and showed his hands. They were unmarked by any cicatrice.

"Are you satisfied?"

"No!" replied Rouletabille. "My dear friend," he said, turning to me, "I am obliged to ask you to leave us alone for a moment."

I bowed and retired, stupefied by what I had seen and heard. I could not understand why M. Robert Darzac had not already shown the door to my impertinent, insulting and stupid friend. I was angry myself with Rouletabille at that moment for his suspicions which had led to this scene of the gloves.

For some twenty minutes I walked about in front of the chateau, trying vainly to link together the different events of the day.

When Rouletabille came out of the chateau in the company of M. Robert Darzac, extraordinary to relate, I saw at a glance that they were the best of friends.

"We are going to the yellow room. Come with us," Rouletabille said to me. "You know, my dear boy, I am going to keep you with me all day. We'll breakfast together somewhere about here"—

"You'll breakfast with me here, gentlemen"—

"You'll fare very badly there. You'll not find anything"—

"Do you think so? Well, I hope to find something there," replied Rouletabille. "After breakfast we'll set to work again. I'll write my article, and if you'll be so good as to take it to the office for me"—

"Won't you come back with me to Paris?"

"No; I shall remain here."

I turned toward Rouletabille. He spoke quite seriously, and M. Robert Darzac did not appear to be in the least degree surprised.

We were passing by the donjon and heard wailing voices. Rouletabille asked:

"Why have these people been arrested?"

ASK WM. MADILL

Parisian Sage, the Hair Grower, is Now Sold in Canada on Money Back Plan

It's a mighty good thing for the women of Canada that Parisian Sage can now be obtained in every town of consequence.

No preparation for the hair has done so much to stop falling hair and eradicate dandruff and make women's hair beautiful as Parisian Sage.

Parisian Sage is the only certain destroyer of the dandruff microbe which is the cause of 97 per cent. of hair troubles.

Parisian Sage is such an extraordinary and quick acting rejuvenator that Wm. Madill, who is the agent in Peterborough, guarantees it to cure dandruff, stop falling hair and itching scalp in two weeks or money back.

SEVEN FIREMEN QUIT THE DEPARTMENT

Handed in Their Clothes Yesterday Afternoon — Reason They Give is Disapproval of Deputy Chief's Methods — One Man Has Rejoined the Brigade

Lieutenant Denno and six men of the Peterborough Fire Department — Dundas, Cadigan, Parker, Reardon, Tindell and Martin — handed in their clothes at the fire hall and severed their connection with the department at 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon.

This morning Lieut. Denno and Fireman Dundas informed the Review that the reason they gave up their positions was because it was impossible for them to tolerate any longer what they claimed to be the domineering and unreasonable attitude of Deputy Chief Grange.

About half an hour after the men had quit, Ald. Morgan, chairman of the Fire, Water and Light Committee, and Ald. Turner, Buller, Batten and Bradburn visited the hall. Ald. Morgan stated that the matter could be remedied by putting Lieut. Denno in Deputy Chief Grange's place, but this was not agreed to by the majority of the aldermen.

Fireman Martin rejoined the brigade but the other men state their retirement will be permanent, unless Grange is replaced.

The Review will interview Chief Howard and Deputy Chief Grange, and the columns of the paper are open to them for a full statement of their side of the case.

THE OPENING SESSION OF PETERBOROUGH ASSOCIATION OF BAPTIST CHURCHES

Highly Satisfactory Reports and Splendid Papers Read at Afternoon and Evening Meetings—Able Address of Misionary at Evening Assembly—Report of the Proceedings

The 108th annual convention of the Peterborough Association of Baptist churches opened yesterday afternoon at the Park street church, under most encouraging auspices. The attendance was excellent at both the afternoon and evening sessions and interesting reports and papers were read.

The afternoon session was opened with the singing of "All Hail the Power of Jesus Name."

Mrs. (Dr.) Scott occupied the chair.

Mrs. Trotter was appointed secretary for the day.

The minutes of the last meeting were read by Miss Nicholl and were adopted.

A nominating committee composed of Mrs. John Hew, Port Hope, convenor; Miss Watson, Gilmour Memorial church, and Mrs. Webb, of the Murray street Baptist church, was appointed.

Mrs. Hunter gave a most interesting paper on Mission Work during the last twenty-five years.

When Jesus looked down upon this sinful world He came with the missionary spirit to save it. When He took human form and labored among us He became a home missionary.

Nineteen hundred years had passed since the time of Dorcas, but her name would always be remembered and would give inspiration to other women.

Christians complained of the expenditures in connection with home missions, but home missions meant more churches and more enlightenment and was that not what we should strive for.

The speaker gave valuable and encouraging information as to the growth and progress of home missions.

Last year $4105 was appropriated in Ontario for home mission work. Splendid work was being accomplished in the Feller Institute in Quebec and among the Indians and other people of Western Canada.

The work done by the Home Missions was a very comprehensive one and covered a wide field.

Mrs. Weston spoke of the excellence of the Baptist denominational papers "Link" and "Visitor," which deal respectively with home and foreign mission work in an especially authorative and interesting way.

Greetings in most cordial sympathy with the meeting of the association were voiced by representatives of the sister churches of the city and the Y. W. C. A.

Miss Mann, of the Park street Baptist church, expressed her pleasure at being able to welcome the delegates to the church and to the homes of the Baptists of Peterborough.

During her address she referred to the importance of the work being done by the women of the church in fostering the objects of missions.

Miss Jackson, of Port Hope, replied thanking the members of the Park street church for their cordial address of welcome.

The next order of business was the roll call and the reports from the circles and bands. Reports were presented from the following mission circles;—Cobourg, Norwood, Lakefield, Haldimand, Murray street, Peterborough Willing Workers, Park street, Port Hope, Gilmour Memorial, Campbellford, Belleville, Indian River and the following bands: Colborne, Haldimand Lakefield, Port Hope, Murray street, Park street, Gilmour Memorial, Belleville (two), Campbellford.

Mrs. G. B. Miller then sang a solo most acceptably.

EVENING SESSION.

These industrial schools aim to send out good, self-supporting citizens, and the great majority of graduates are doing well.

The Indians are very musical, delighting in singing and playing, and there were over one hundred in the village where Miss Hannah was stationed, who could read music. Selfishness is one of the greatest characteristics of the Indians.

The medical work in British Columbia was much needed. The doctors and nurses care for the patients at a time when they are much more easily reached by the story of the gospel. The hospital work and doctors have also taught them correct sanitary methods.

The hospital again is a great boon to the whites who work in the lumber camps, where none of the comforts of home life are felt. When any of these are taken ill they are taken to the hospital, and even for the short time they are confined there they live in the atmosphere of a refined Christian home, and many of them have gone out better men because of the medical work in British Columbia.

In closing, Miss Hannah made a strong appeal for more help and for more prayer to aid them in their work. Let us all, as loyal Canadians, rise to the call of the Indians and to the call of all these people who are immigrating to our country. It makes a vast difference to us, whether these people become good, honest citizens or a menace to our country.

Mr. C. L. Bates was the next speaker of the evening. It gave him great pleasure to be allowed to tell the Women's Missionary Society about Japan.

Those who live in Japan appreciate fully the work that is being done by the W.M.S. There is a type of work that men cannot do in a non-Christian country. Women can do better work than even the native missionaries in Japan, and the work among the women of Japan is very inadequate.

The establishment of a Christian home is the one great ideal of the Japanese woman. In speaking of missionary work, the speaker said it must not be looked upon like slumming would be, as helping only the lower class. In some respects the Japanese surpass us. After a careful study of eight years, and speaking with all sincerity, he considered the Japanese one of the greatest nations on earth, and embodying some great characteristics.

The most important principal in the Japanese heart is loyalty. It is the foundation of the life of their country. No women cry when their sons and husbands leave for the battlefield. The history of Japan is full of examples of the heroism and patriotism of the people. Loyalty with the Japanese is not a calculating affair. They are loyal for the same reason that we are loyal to our wives and mothers, and are essentially self-sacrificing.

Filial piety is with the Japanese second only to loyalty. They believe that obedience is the natural and necessary thing. Early in life the children are taught to take care of their parents.

It is interesting for us to study the great influence of family life upon the Japanese people, and how, through it, the Japanese empire has been held together.

Family life is always perpetuated in the homes, and if no children are born into a family the parents will prefer adopting a child rather than remain in a childless home. The Japanese are apt to criticize American family life, saying that Christianity tends to weaken it, but, said Mr. Bates, here their reasoning is wrong. It is really the lack of Christianity that weakens the family life. In Japan any religion that would gain a foothold must conform to these two fundamental characteristics, loyalty and filial piety.

They are very polite and very self-depreciating words are used by them when speaking of themselves and of their wives. A Japanese will take you into his dining-room and make you seat yourself at a table laden with good things to eat, and then say: "Here is nothing, please eat it."

Another peculiarity of the Japanese, or rather good characteristic, is their lack of profanity. The Japanese never swear. It is necessary to live in Japan before one can really understand the Japanese people. The ladies are humble in demeanor, and modest, and also very self-reliant.

Mr. Bates closed his address with a strong plea for the powerful and earnest prayers for the salvation of the Japanese.

EVENING SESSION.

The evening session was an interesting one for those present. It was opened with devotional exercises with the Rev. J. R. Webb officiating. Then followed addresses of welcome by Ald. J. J. Turner, acting for his Worship Mayor Morrow, who was unable to be present and Rev. W. C. Riddiford.

On behalf of the city of Peterborough Ald. Turner welcomed the delegates.

REV. W. C. RIDDIFORD.

REV. MR. BONNER.

Rev. Mr. Bonner replied on behalf of the delegates.

A vocal solo was next given by Miss Clara Kidd and her number received well merited applause.

Mrs. Baskerville's address on "The Revival in India" will appear to-morrow.

The morning session to-day was mainly devoted to routine business.

Rev. A. H. Brace, formerly pastor of Park St. church, presided during the devotional exercises.

After this the moderator, Rev. J. R. Bonner, took the chair. The following ministers were settled for the year, and were briefly introduced and responded:—

Rev. T. C. Sowter, of Sydney, Northumberland County.

Rev. J. S. Laflair, of Port Hope.

Rev. John Galt, of Picton.

Rev. J. T. Cowen, B.A., of Colborne

Rev. W. C. Riddiford, who was absent from the association meeting last year, was also introduced.

At 9.30 the reports of the missionary secretaries were given, referring to the Home, Foreign, Grand Ligne, Northwest and Superannuation missions.

A nominating committee appointed by the moderator, is as follows—Rev. J. S. Laflair, Port Hope, convenor; Rev. John Galt, Picton; Rev. W. C. Riddiford, of Park St.; Rev. W. C. Sage and three laymen, namely, R. Post, Colborne; A. Rovebeck, Norwood, and A. A. McCullen, Port Hope.

The reading of church letters and the clerk's report, ended the morning session.

DISTRICT ORGANIZERS CHOSEN AT MISSIONARY CONVENTION

Valuable Paper and Discussion on Systematic Giving—Interesting Lecture on Furlough—Fruitful Session of the Convention

WEDNESDAY, 2 p.m.

The meeting was opened by repeating the Lord's Prayer, after which questions of interest were dealt with.

The minutes were then read and approved.

Report from organizers' conference was then read by Mrs. Edminson and read as follows;—

Resolved.—That we, the organizers of the Bay of Quinte branch do not approve of the appointment of a District Corresponding Secretary, and further would suggest that in order to assist the Branch Corresponding Secretary, the Easter envelopes and other supplies be sent to the organizers for distribution if she so desire.

Mrs. J. R. Real then conducted a conference on Systematic and Proportionate Giving.

A paper was given by Miss Yarwood on this most important subject. Miss Yarwood said we should render to God a definite proportion of our income as a recognition that all we have is His. We should practice proportionate giving, because, in the first not only does God command our out tithes, but His work requires it. The application of the tithing rule will neccessitate the careful keeping of accounts. If a woman has an income from the rent of property, she will take the rental, less repairs, and in other ways continue to give her tenth. No matter how small our tithe, with God's blessing it will accomplish miracles.

Mrs. Reah then asked the question, "What are the duties of the Superintendent of Systematic Giving in the Society?" which was fully answered in Mrs. Raynor's address, a few thoughts from which we give below.

Why did our W.M.S. take up this subject? Find out what it is. Go to your Bible for facts concerning it. Study what are the effects of systematic giving.

Would our church be benefitted? If every one of us gave one-tenth we would have abundance of money for everything. Is it going to be helpful to our women spiritually?

I have asked hundreds of women and they always say there is nothing helps me so much. I feel I am in partnership with God.

Will it help the church? It certainly would help the church if we had more money. Find out what is your income and then give the tenth.

Local Superintendents should have something to say at every meeting. Have something bright and new and fresh for every meeting. A woman is none the less a good member of the auxiliary if she does not give systematically. All women cannot give systematically.

Never get discouraged because you do not see results right away. Though our work may seem to be discouraging now, yet it will bear fruit.

A short discussion followed the reading of the papers, in which several of the delegates told their experience in systematic giving.

The District Organizers were then appointed.

Belleville—Mrs. H. K. Denyes, Foxboro.

Brighton—Mrs. Winterborne, Trenton; Mrs. Edmison, Brighton.

Bowmanville—Miss Joness, Bowmanville.

Whitby—Mrs. Pearce—Port Perry.

Cannington—Mrs. Prouse, Little Britain.

Lindsay—Mrs. M. E. Wilson, Pontypool.

Peterborough—Mrs. J. R. Moore, Peterborough.

Cobourg—Mrs. Roberts, Wickelow.

Picton—Mrs. M. W. Laird, Picton.

Napanee—Mrs. Valleau, Morren.

Tamworth—Mrs. D. E. Rose, Tamworth.

Campbellford—Mrs. G. W. Hammond, Campbellford.

Madoc—Mrs. George Frost, Tweed.

A by-law was passed changing branch by-law No. 4 to the report in the district shall be from the beginning of the year (ay) until the time of the district convention.

The President then lead a discussion on several questions from the auxiliary question drawer.

The meeting then adjourned.

THE WORK OF MISSIONARIES AMONG THE UNCONVERTED

Two Splendid Addresses by Mission Laborers in Foreign Vineyards--First Public Session of Woman's Missionary Society at Charlotte Street Methodist Church—Mayor Morrow Welcomes Delegates

The first public session in connection with the Women's Missionary Convention at Charlotte St. church was held Tuesday night in the church. Great enthusiasm marked every phase of the proceedings, and the attendance was very large.

The opening devotional exercises were conducted by Rev. G. W. Henderson, and the choir of the church rendered very material aid to the enjoyment of the evening. A brief opening address by Mr. Henderson followed, the latter then calling on Mayor Morrow for an address of welcome.

His Worship said it gave him great pleasure to have the privilege of addressing the meeting, and in his official capacity he had the pleasure of extending to them the freedom of the city. Peterborough had a population of 16,000, and ranked sixth in size among the manufacturing cities of Canada. In concluding his address he congratulated the Women's Missionary Society on the good and noble work they were engaged in, and hoped that their convention in Peterborough would be profitable, and that their visit here would always remain as a pleasant memory in their minds.

Short addresses of welcome from the sister societies of the Methodist Women's Missionary Society then followed. Representatives from each of the following churches were present, All Saints', Park Street, Murray Street, St. John's and St. Luke's. Mrs. Rogers, who spoke for All Saints', also brought greetings from the members of St. Paul's, St. Andrew's and Knox church, and concluded her address with the statement that they were all fighting in one great cause—the advancement of missionary work.

Mrs. Platt, president of the Woman's Missionary Society, was the next speaker. An address of welcome from the mayor, said Mrs. Platt, was a new feature at missionary meetings, and she was very grateful that they had been so highly honored. It was always a pleasure to exchange greetings with sister societies. Mrs. Platt sincerely hoped that all the societies would be especially blessed in their work.

A dialogue by the Mission Band girls was the next item on the programme, and this was very cleverly given by these little girls.

An instructive address on work in West China, by Miss Charlotte A. Brooks, returned missionary from Clentu, was listened to with keenest attention.

The China of to-day was an awakened China, said the speaked. They had come into contact with the missionaries of some religious denomination in all of the eighteen provinces of China. The young blood of China has gone abroad, and discovered many things that they were anxious to introduce into their native land.

They had imported Japanese teachers to teach in their colleges and in other ways were striving hard for educational advantages. In China, to find out what was most needed, one had to get to the bottom of affairs.

In one large province in Japan there were only four schools, and these were totally inadequate when the number of children were considered. The moulding character of the girls in China was so lasting that they had to be taught right when young. Many civilized nations gave of their money, but were not willing to sacrifice themselves to the work.

Regarding hospital work in China Miss Brooks spoke very hopefully. When one sees the sickness in China, the people suffering from tubercular trouble, smallpox and various other diseases, how glad the missionary was that she could direct them to the hospitals, where they would be treated scientifically, and where every kindness was shown to them. In the hospitals they were also told of the gospel of salvation.

The missionary's life should resemble the life of Jesus as much as possible. The Kingdom of Christ in China would do away with graft. High officials would no longer hold their positions through favoritism.

Miss Brooks ended her address with a plea for more help for China. The future of China she left with God, but just as surely as China was God's, He was using us to effect its salvation.

Mrs. G. B. Hughes rendered a sacred solo, and this was followed by a chorus sung by the Mission Band of the church, entitled "Missionary Bells." Mr. Downie sang a patriotic number called "My Own Canadian Home."

The last address of the evening was given by Miss Jessie K. Munro, on "The Mission Work Among the Galicians," and was also listened to with the deepest interest.

The Galicians were, perhaps, the most difficult of all foreigners to be won to Christ. In the first place they were suspicious, they imagine we are trying to get the best of them financially. Then they were doubtful that we were really going to do them good. They were proud and independent.

Although not our inferiors physically, they realized their inferiority to Canadians in mental and social culture, and did not desire to associate themselves with us. The Galician people resented an injury, but were equally sensitive to a kindness.

The Galicians at home were mostly small farmers, and they came here to improve their condition. A great many took up homesteads, although several preferred city life.

When they come to Canada their poverty is extreme. Their houses are mere hovels. They have no farm implements, except a hatchet, with which they are very skilful. The first thing they do is to hire out on the railroads or in mines, endeavoring to earn sufficient money to buy the necessary farm implements. As the men get money the whole family take on an appearance of respectability, and in time they become good farmers and citizens.

WEDNESDAY MORNING SESSION:

Opening exercises were conducted by Rev. C. H. Coon at yesterday morning meeting.

After the minutes had been read and approved Mrs. Hammond opened the conference on circle work by reading an excellent paper prepared by Miss Platt. She said in part: "How can the girls cultivate a greater interest in missions? By mission study. To report new methods and plans for work, glean all information possible. Receptions given occasionally is a good plan to secure new members. Sometimes the circle is made unpopular by overchanging or overurging. Learn the lesson of self-sacrifice, always remembering whose we are and whom we serve."

Mrs. Hammond then led the discussion and many helpful plans were brought up.

The memorials are being discussed in open session, and the results will be printed later.

EVENING MEETING.

In the evening the chair was occupied by Rev. E. A. Pearson.

After some preliminary opening exercises by the choir and a solo by Miss Pringle, Mr. Pearson introduced the first speaker of the evening, Miss Hannah M. Paul, a missionary in British Columbia, among the Indians.

"My particular mission to-night," said Miss Hannah, "is to tell you about the Indians. The Women's Missionary Society began the first missionary society began the first missionary work in British Columbia, commencing with women and children because heathenism is always hardest on the women and children."

The work had grown. In 1892 they built the first home for training the Indians. Orphans coming to this home. They were taken in and educated and became respectable citizens, most of them. There were others who came, children of the better class, who appreciated the education given at the home, and they were taught to sew, cook and other useful occupations.

Mr. and Mrs. Crossley were the first missionaries to Fort Simpson, B. C. When they went there, they found superstition and idolatry reigning. Unscrupulous fur-traders supplied the Indians with fire-water and thir lives were degraded.

Mr. Crossley first commenced a great revival. His method was first evangelization and then conversion. He then showed the Indians how to build a church and the same church is now remodelled and five hundred reverent worshippers may be often seen kneeling in prayer in that same edifice to-day.

At the present time there is a boy's home and a girl's home, where each are taught useful things. The teachers are held responsible for the mental and moral training of these young people. All subjects that are taught in the public schools were also taught there.

MEN OF ACTION.

The Story of a Perilous Rescue Expedition In Alaska.

In the rush for Alaska gold men did not forget to be ready to help the unfortunate. The author of "Trailing and Camping In Alaska," Mr. A. M. Powell, narrates an incident that occurred at Valdes. The place was overcrowded with prospectors and miners, food was scarce, and there was a good deal of sickness. Many had come over the glacier, and others had lost their lives in the attempt.

A dog team galloped up and stopped in front of the only pretense of a hotel at Valdes. The night was dark, as the northern winter nights always are when the moon is not shining. The dogs immediately lay down, almost exhausted from their long trip, and the two men were soon surrounded by inquiring friends. One of the two said:

"What do you think fellows? Just this side of Sawmill camp we passed a woman who was pulling a sled on which was her sick husband. We remonstrated against the undertaking of crossing the glacier, but she replied that they might as well die up there as anywhere else, as it meant certain death to stop. Our dogs could only pull our outfit, and there wasn't grub enough for all, so we were compelled to leave them. They will be at the last timber to-night, and if somebody does not go to their rescue they will be dead by this time to-morrow."

A man stepped out from the crowd and said:

"I'll go for one. Now, who else has a good dog team to splice in with mine?"

"I'm your huckleberry," announced another.

It was 3 o'clock in the morning before they had made their selection of dogs and were ready to start on that hazardous trip.

"There goes the best dog team in Alaska and driven by the best two men on earth!" exclaimed a man as they turned a corner and were gone.

The trail was easily followed, and soon the nine miles of level bench were passed. The speed slackened only when they were ascending the summit, which they reached by 11 that morning.

Down, down the steep descent they plunged, and by 1 o'clock were off the glacier and skipping over level ground. The poor woman had pulled the sled until she was exhausted and had sat down beside her husband. She was bidden to seat herself comfortably, while they fastened the two sleds together. Soon they were bounding away at such a rapid rate of speed that the woman wept for joy. When they recrossed the summit the whole range was "smoking" and the wind was sending the fine snow along the crust.

"Twenty miles to town, and it can never catch us," said the driver.

Townsmen anxiously waited and watched the trail. As the team rushed up they were surrounded by eager, helping hands. They were saved by men not of good intentions only, but by men of instant action

GOVERNANCE OF INDIA

FRENCHMAN'S VIEW OF BRITISH RULE IN THE EAST.

M. Joseph Chailley of the Chamber of Deputies, After a Study of Eastern Affairs, Has Collaborated on a Book In Which He Pays a Glowing Tribute to Great Britain's Work Among the Hindu Races.

M. Joseph Chailley, a member of the French Chamber of Deputies, has, with the co-operation of Sir William Meyer, written a valuable and impartial study of the present-day conditions of the Indian Empire. "Administrative Problems of British India" is comprehensive, calm, and eminently informative.

The Radical politician and the Babu agitator attempts to deny that East is East and West is West. A set of facts printed by M. Chailley in an early chapter clearly indicate the vast difference.

"As regards child marriage, the statistics are stupefying. In India the 1901 census showed 121,500 married boys and 243,500 married girls whose age was under five; between the ages of five and ten the figures are 760,000 and 2,030,000 respectively; between ten and fifteen, 2,540,000 and 6,585,000.

"Further, there were no less than 1,277,000 widowed persons under twenty, of whom 914,000 were females. Of these, 6,000 widowers and 96,000 widows were less than five years of age; 37,000 widowers and 96,000 widows between five and ten; and 113,000 widowers and 276,000 widows between ten and fifteen."

Could any figures more dramatically demonstrate the entire dissimilarity of social conditions? M. Chailley notes in the Indian an Oriental disinclination to work.

"At first sight everybody seems to be taking an active part in some common toil; as a matter of fact, several persons are looking on at the labor of one. As has been cynically remarked, out of five people who seem to be working, one is doing nothing, one is resting, one is looking on, and another is helping the previous three."

Much, naturally, is said of the much-discussed National Party, but it is insisted that it stands for a small class and a small part of the Empire.—

"As a matter of fact, this so-called National party is really a party of privilege, a concourse of representatives of the high castes and the rich classes, which is really a stranger to the nation on whose behalf it professes to speak. . . .

"What would rejoice the Babus of Bengal and the Poona Brahmans would be likely to cause grave displeasure to the men of action in the United Provinces and the Punjab."

M. Chailley points out some of the weaknesses of British rules, and explains the native unrest, but he adds:

"It would be wrong, however, to conclude from the remarks in this chapter that the peoples of India are weary of British supremacy or administration. The loyalty of the great majority is still incontestable, and it extends to students, lawyers, Deccan Brahmans, and even to the Babus of Bengal and the chiefs of the National party. This was clearly shown by the universal and spontaneous mourning at the death of Queen Victoria."

The sharp distinction between the races and the lack of social mingling are, as always, observed, but even these are not universal.

"The British officers of the Indian army and the frontier officials are fond of the natives, their companions in sport and war. The Englishman adores bravery and respects pride; he meets both among the native soldiers on the Northwest Frontier and in the Punjab and Rajputana.

"A British officer's native orderly is not a menial servant; he only looks after his master's weapons, but he is devoted to him, and if he is ill will pass nights by his bedside; while on the field of battle he will save him or die with him. On actual military service the soldier is disciplined and respectful and the officer stiff, but outside they talk freely.

"The soldier asks advice from his officer, and will consult him on his family affairs or about a lawsuit. The officer listen and helps, and, outside the barracks, will walk with a Sepoy and speak to him familiarly. Hence there is a rapproachement, due to common dangers and common tastes, but it is an exception."

M. Chailley points out, too, that there is little social life among the natives themselves:

"The wife of the well-known and lately-deceased Justice Tyabji of the High Court of Bombay said in 1903 at the annual meeting of an Indian ladies' club: 'We complain that Europeans keep aloof from us, but that is largely our fault. I ask you how many among ourselves, Hindus, Mussulmans, or Parsis, want to meet altogether? Is it pride or reserve which keeps us apart? Is it not rather a difference in manners, habits, education, dress, language, and religion? Let us,' she added, 'begin by union among ourselves.' These are significant remarks."

"The Government of India might, as many other Governments do, regard its work with placid and silent contentment," says M. Chailley. "But its passion for the public good and its desire for improvement constantly impel it to check its conceptions by their results. It examines, blames, and reforms itself, and, as a consequence, it seems to condemn itself in the eyes of superficial critics.

"But any one who has studied its ample legislative work and examined, stage by stage, its different and successive creations, feels himself bound to set aside the criticisms which the slowless or the imperfections of this work might provoke, and to render homage to the conscientiousness and knowledge which it displays.

"The Indians only plead their talent and cleverness; the English are specially pre-occupied with character. What they look to mainly is the moral value of the man: coolness in decision, rapidity in action, a conscience which can resist temptation, and an energy which can face threats — in fine, a sentiment of duty towards one's country and oneself."

The Pullman Car Co. were refused an injunction to prevent the lowering of sleeping car rates.

WAIL OF THE HOUSE BUYER.

Last year I paid a landlord rent,
And when the days of spring came back
Unto that gentleman I went
And told him to repair the shack.
I bade him paint the kitchen floor
And decorate the bedrooms, too;
I bade him tint the dining room
And make the place as good as new.

Last fall I found a house I liked
And paid two hundred dollars down
And twenty-five a month as well.
The plan is one of great renown;
The house is mine or will be when
I've paid for what the contract calls.
This spring, alas, it's up to me
To decorate the parlor walls!

There is no landlord now to whom
I may appeal for spring repairs.
We need a coat of varnish on
The parlor floors and open stairs.
New window screens must be supplied.
The dining room must papered be.
I miss my landlord very much.
These bills will all be sent to me.

Today I bought a can of paint
And things I've never bought before,
As brushes and a putty knife.
I'm going to paint the kitchen floor.
And I am going to try to build
A fence around our garden small.
Although it's nice to own a home,
I miss the landlord after all.

SOME INTERESTING SUBJECTS BY PROMINENT AUTHORS

Wanted: A Practical Man; He Wins All the Prizes.

By Dr. Madison C. Peters.

THE world is full of theorists who imagine that if their plans and schemes were put into operation the millennium would dawn before its time. Earth would be transformed into a bowery of happiness and delight where care and worry would be unknown. Men and women would bask in an eternal sunshine with never a cloud to overcast the brightness of their bliss. But the trouble is that the beautiful designs of these visionaries and dreamers never can assume real forms. They are impracticable, impossible.

We do not want men to tell us how to do things, but we want them to do the things themselves and thus show us how to do them. A man may describe a beautiful way for getting to the planet Mars, but as long as he never has tried that way himself and so demonstrated its practicability we have little or no faith in his plans.

Availability Wins the Prize.

A man's success depends largely upon his practical capabilities. Not ability, but availability, wins the prize. Availability is the capacity to use to advantage all of one's powers. A college diploma does not secure success. An educated pig remains a pig, an educated fool remains himself.

Education must be sown on good soil to produce a good crop; if the ground is shallow and devoid of the right constituents there will be but a poor return. A silk purse never can be made from a pig's ear, so a gentleman never can be made from a cad, a wise man from a fool, nor a practical man from an idealist.

Men who can accomplish, who can bring about results, are needed in every condition of life today. Of such men there is a dearth everywhere and the consequence is that owing to the limited competition between them they are able to command large salaries and occupy influential positions among their fellows.

Make the Wheels Revolve.

These are the men who make the wheels of the world revolve, who are the guiding hands at the levers of commerce, business, and trade, who speed the train and steer the ship to the destinations of progress and prosperity. Without them the world would degenerate, go back to the primitive, and the greatest institutions of man would crumble and decay. Such men teach us the true education, the education of both head and hand, the hand to do what the head directs. They need no college diploma to recommend them, their certificate of merit is the actions they perform.

Book education without the ability to turn it to practical account is a drug on the market. Gold is of little service to a man starving in a desert for want of bread and water. Book knowledge may be a hindrance to a man, inasmuch as he may by it become too refined for any practical purpose.

Many men are so polished and refined by higher education that they become like a finely tempered steel instrument ground down to the sharpest point, and which flies in pieces the moment it strikes the hard surface of the world. The heavy, blunt instrument, by the power of its own force, is able to bore its way through.

Head Trained Too Much.

Many of our young men are so exquisitely cultivated as to be good for nothing but to be kept in a showcase as specimens of what the most approved systems of education can do. They emerge annually from our colleges utterly unfit to take even the most obscure place, totally unequipped for the battle of life into which they must enter, and this simply because all their time has been given to the dry "isms," "ologies," and "osophies" of the schools—the head altogether trained at the expense of the hand.

However, a change is coming. Hard headed, practical men have begun to see the folly of sending their sons to colleges merely to learn the wisdom of the dead past. The past is gone and what suited it will not do for the present.

What was new twenty years ago is antiquated today. There are no better scholars than formerly, but systems are different and the necessities of the times have changed.

Know One Thing and Do It.

What the times now demand is a sound, practical education along definite lines. The encyclopedic man of the past, who knew a thousand subjects in a general way, but had not knowledge to put one of them into practical use, is obsolete. We want the man who knows one thing and can do it, and do it well. This is the man of the hour, this is the man who is in demand, this is the man who gets to the front when the man whose head is almost bursting with all kinds of book knowledge is left far behind in the race.

The man who knows how to drive a steam engine has the advantage of the man who can teach Greek and Latin; of course if the engineer knows Greek and Latin, all the better, they will not mar his skill in driving the engine, but if he does not know them he will be just as useful a man in the business in which he is engaged.

The man who to book knowledge adds practical ability has the right kind of an education. He who can mend a hole in a pot when the pot is required to cook a dinner for a hungry traveler is of more benefit to that traveler than the most learned savant on earth who could not mend the pot.

Trade Schools Are Increasing.

That the trend of the times is towards practicability in education is evidenced by the number of trade schools and industrial institutions which are springing up all over the country. Yearly they are turning out well equipped men with a sound, practical knowledge of the mechanical callings and crafts upon which rests to a great extent our prestige as a nation.

It is the workers, the artisans, mechanics, and tradesmen who are at the base of our national welfare; they are the props on which rests the structure of our power. Take them away and it will totter and fall.

Burke wisely said: "There is no force in mere intellectual ability standing in all the nakedness and solitude of metaphysical abstraction." What we need is a curriculum dealing with the practical affairs of life. Schiller designated the final education of the human race to consist in action which fits man for the proper performance of the duties of life.

We Live in a Fast Age.

We are living in a fast age; we have no time to do anything properly. Where is the American youth who would spend twelve years with Angelo studying anatomy to be perfect in his work as a sculptor? In one-tenth of that time the young American would undertake to chisel an Apollo Belvedere.

We do everything in a hurry. We rush through school, jump into business, do feverish work, break down in middle life, and die when we should only be beginning in reality to live.

We take short cuts and have abridged methods; the work is all done to please the eye, and as a consequence soundness and solidity have been neglected. But we are now trying to remedy this, and in the future this country promises to be without a rival in every field of human endeavor, for she is making it imperative for her institutions to educate in the right direction and so turn out such practical men and women as will build the ramparts of strength around her and make her impregnable to the rest of the world.

Married Men Best Workers; Often Get the Best Jobs.

By Ben Burbanks.

THE rule announced by a Chicago bank a few years ago that marriage would mean discharge for clerks and messengers getting less than $1,000 a year, caused a good deal of criticism for the bank and some sympathy for the employés. Many people jumped to the conclusion that big business houses gave single men the preference when it came to giving out jobs.

An investigation shows that the shoe really pinches the other foot. In a majority of cases where any discrimination is made, the married man gets the better of his bachelor brother.

"I wouldn't go to such an extreme as discharging a man because he is single," said the manager of a good sized Chicago wholesale house, "but when I put on a new man I must confess I give the preference to one that has a wife. For any position above that of office boy or cub clerk, if two applicants are otherwise equal, the bachelor gets turned down. It isn't altogether that the married man needs the money worst, though perhaps that has a little to do with it, but my experience shows that the Benedicts are a shade steadier and more reliable than the bachelors. They hang on to their jobs more religiously and they have fewer distracting outside interests."

Thief Usually Single Man.

"I figure that nine-tenths of the small peculations and embezzlements that come under my notice during the year, are the work of single men," says a business detective connected with one of the bonding concerns. "I'm not saying that the man with a wife is any more honest than the man without, but he certainly is less exposed to that form of temptation that makes an employé short in his accounts. Now and then some fellow will steal for his wife's sake, but he's ten times more likely to do it for some woman not his wife. The wife knows her husband's circumstances, and notwithstanding occasional stories of feminine extravagance, you can mark it down for a fact that a married woman isn't going to ruin her husband's career and her own happiness by encouraging expenditures that the income won't stand.

"It isn't the married men, as a rule, who lead the gay life," continued the detective. "Sometimes, no doubt, Smith feels a little bit mistreated at seeing what an awful lot of fun Jones has, but Smith, who is married, really has no reason to be sorry for himself. It's a good thing for him that he is obliged to give his salary to the missus and the kids and cut out his share of the good times of Jones. I'm married myself and I know."

Bachelors First to Go.

When business gets slack and men are laid off, there are few firms who do not give the sack to the bachelors. An inquiry among the Chicago firms who reduced their force this winter reveals that almost without exception the men with wives and families were retained. There is that much sentiment in business, at least. Several of the superintendents and managers confessed that they laid off the best men and kept the poorest in a number of instances.

"A man who has only himself to look out for can make some sort of a shift for a living," explained one manager, "but a sudden layoff is a mighty serious thing for a man with a family. I didn't have the heart to let any of my married men go. In a few instances I gave the firm the worst of it by this discrimination, but I guess the stockholders are not going to kick. If they do I can't help it."

There may be a little truth in the view that one bachelor takes of the question, though it is not quite complimentary to some of the employers.

"Married men will stand for more than single ones," [illegible] he. "That's one reason why some of the [illegible] like them. A married man is a he[illegible], treadmill sort of a creature. He's got his neck in the yoke and the boss knows it. He dare not ask for a raise, for he can't afford to quit in case it is refused.

Benedict Can't Look Around.

"If he belongs to the low salaried class of workers the chances are that he keeps a week or two behind his pay envelope, [illegible] he is afraid to take his nose off the grindstone long enough to look for a better job. The boss can make him work overtime without extra money, or he can make him work short time and dock him for the hours he lost, whichever the needs of business may demand. The single man can quit, but the married man is tied hands and heels."

There is one firm in Chicago employing an average of ten men where no single man is eligible to a place on the pay roll. The applicant for a job who confesses that he's a bachelor is turned down at once, though, of course, the real reason for his refusal isn't explained to him. The curious thing about this business house is that the managing owner is a confirmed old bachelor and never speaks two words to a woman if he can help it. What sort of a dream of "what might have been" stirs his heart nobody knows, but it is certain that he won't give a job to the man that is not married.

It is said that one of the employés of this bachelor lost his wife a few years ago, and he knew the rule so well that he was afraid to confess his widowerhood to his boss. He hid his bereavement as best he could and there were only three men in the office who knew that his companion had died, and they were pledged to secrecy. Whether the boss would have fired him for his misfortune if he had found it out nobody knows.

How Plugging Parker Rose; A Story of Going & Co.

By Allan Wilson.

MARKHAM and Parker came into the big office at the same time, and everybody who troubled to size them up agreed that they had an even start.

If they had known more of the pair than was to be gained from a mere cursory observation of them after they had got on to the pay roll, everybody would have been certain that never were two men more equally fitted to fight for a position of importance and good salary in the office of Going & Co. than were these two. That they were accounted as being on a par when they entered the office was proof that up to this time both had profited in the same measure by the advantages that their youth had held forth to them.

As similar as such things may well be were the advantages possessed by Markham and Parker in the days which are devoted to the training of the man. Parker came from the family that owned the big house on the northeast corner of the two principal residence streets in the small town where he was born; Markham came from the family that owned and lived in the house on the northwest corner. Markham was born on the seventh of July; Parker saw the light of day on the tenth. At school they began in the same term, graduated on the same day; Parker delivered the class poem, Markham was responsible for the class prophecy.

Then, with their high school days over, they were ready to face the world together, for they both possessed the great advantage of owning parents who were comparatively poor, and Markham got $5 a week to begin with as bookkeeper in the sawmill office, while Parker, not to be outdone, was granted the same remuneration for attending to such clerical work as was needed in the establishment of the one grain buyer of the town.

Started on Road to Fame.

So they were off on an even start on what high school had taught them to call the perilous seas of business life, and their parents patted themselves on the back and thought of the noble positions achieved by their sons at the outsets of their careers, and knew that nothing remained but a few years till the time when their names—the sons'—should be ones to conjure with at the note window of the bank.

But the sons thought differently from their parents, as sons have a way of doing, and the title of prominent citizens in their old home town appealed to them not at all. They were born to a newer age than their parents and their dreams were broader and reached farther away. So far away did they reach that they made their way even unto a big city, and little by little they increased in might, until one bright day they pulled the two boys off their stools in the offices back home and put them aboard the cars, bound for the city and the broader destiny.

It was hard work for them to tear themselves loose; their parents predicted utter ruin in the city; their girls wept; their respective employers opened the bounty of their hearts and offered to raise their salaries to $7 a week. But even this golden temptation would not stay the ambitious ones. To the city, read their resolves, and to the city, and to the office of Going & Co. did they go, as well matched and even a pair as ever squeezed on to the pay-roll of the soulless corporation.

Old Man Notices Pair.

Being equally inexperienced they were put to work in the invoice department, where the raw material is taken in and tested to see if it is worth working into something of importance, and their salaries were $10 a week.

As far as the outward signs go, there can be no doubt that Markham and Parker started in to climb the ladder of preference in the big office on an even basis. If the aim of fate had been to put them to a test in the matter, had sought to put two men on the first rung of the ladder, neither having any advantage over the other, it could not have done better than to have picked up this pair just as circumstances had made them. Old Going, who saw all things and noticed a few, noticed the combination.

"Sort of keep an eye on those two new men in the invoice," he said to his private information man. "I want reports on their progress every once in awhile."

Thus they had attracted the same sort of attention at the beginning; fate persisted in keeping them even at the start.

Parker Gets a Little Ahead.

And now witness the beginning of the change, for at the end of the first four months of their employment in the office the private information man came to old Going and said:

"About those two new men in the invoice department; Parker has done so well that he has been given a $2 raise, while Markham is holding his job and no more."

They no longer were experiments but accepted and regular clerks. No longer were the errors which they perpetrated or the work which they failed to do excused upon the grounds of lack of experience. They now were judged as experienced men; the standard which they must measure up to was raised proportionately; and the result was that the difference between Parker and Markham became more and more pronounced.

Parker, it was easy to see now, was the man who would make his mark. He was the plugger of the pair, the ambition driven individual who would let no obstacle stop him, who would permit no delinquency on his own part hinder him in achieving the purpose to which he had set his mind. Doggedly and persistingly he was improving in his work, steadily and systematically he was learning the routine business of the department in which he had been placed.

He was no common clerk; he was not content to wear the seat of his trousers out on a stool without getting more to show for it than $12 a week. He would gather experience and business knowledge and in the end he would profit by it. All this was to be seen in the set, nervous expression of Parker and in the slavish manner in which he applied himself to his work.

Markham Talks, Parker Works.

And now it was to be seen that Markham was the dreamer. He was the impractical, unfixed, irresolute member of the combination. While Parker in a leisure moment was delving into the mysteries of invoice checking Markham was wandering about the office talking with whomsoever happened to be at leisure and willing to talk to him, or standing around watching the people in other departments at their appointed tasks.

It was plainly apparent that he wasn't the kind of a man who can concentrate himself upon his work and apply his energies to it in the way which brings success. For if he was would he not be more interested in the invoice department? Would he not spend his spare time, as Parker did, in learning all about the work that he had to do?

Of course. So Parker, noticing his friend's disposition to ramble and pay attention to other things besides the work of invoicing, would have felt sorry for him if he had had the time or if his interest had not been so engrossed in learning how to bill.

Of the three years which lay between their entry into the office and the parting of their ways little need be said here. Parker, of course, by this time had clearly demonstrated that he was to be the big success; Markham, it is to be feared, had shown a capacity which promised nothing better than mediocrity. Parker was head checker in the invoice department; and Markham was only one of the clerks. The old rule had proven itself; the plugger had won, the other fellow was left behind.

Parker Tells Big News.

Parker was considerably embarrassed when the day came for telling Markham the big news. It would bring such a big change in their relations; he would be Markham's boss; and, as Parker reasoned it, their friendship must then cease. He approached his friend diffidently.

"Old man, I've got something of a little boost," he said. "I—they've took and made me assistant to the head of the department."

He paused to let the significance of this statement sink in and to allow Markham to recover from the same. It was a big boost, this; it meant that he would be one of the officers instead of a private, that he would draw $22 a week instead of $16. And Markham would be one of the privates under him.

"When do you go up, Bill?" asked Markham nonchalantly. Parker was shocked. He had expected more surprise on Markham's part than this. Besides, he was beginning to think of himself solely as Mr. Parker, and the other's rude familiarity shocked him.

"I begin as Mr. Foraker's assistant next Monday," he said, stiffly. "I hope there aren't any hard feelings. You know, Markham, you had the same chance to get up there as I did; you could have done what I could—if you'd wanted to."

Markham Also Goes Up.

"So you go up Monday, eh, Bill?" said Markham, paying no attention to the other's last words. "That's funny. It's Monday that I go into the legal department—the same day."

"What?"

"The legal department. You see I didn't see much of a chance for a fellow in this department even if he got to be the head of it. So I kind of looked around and saw what I could see, and I decided that the legal end of a corporation was the one where a man could get in his hooks the deepest. Yep. And so I went to work and studied law nights, and the other day I had a talk with Old Blackstone, the head, and he said to come to work in there Monday."

"Twenty-five," said Markham, cheerily. "But that's nothing; the start's the thing, the chance to get at something big. Don't you think so, Bill?"

"Yes," said Parker, faintly. He thought of the weary years before him as a chief sort of clerk. "Yes, I think so—now."

Learn Fine Cooking in Paris; Americans Make Good Chefs

By John Trainer.

GO to Paris and become a French chef, then come home and make money.

Though good chefs are not well paid in France, French chefs are greatly in demand and command high wages in foreign countries. Overcrowding is the explanation for the poor pay at home. This is caused in two ways. Frenchmen are born cooks, so when young men go to work in hotels they believe that the cuisine is the easiest and most remunerative work. Then, every year hundreds of chefs from Germany, Italy, Norway, Sweden, and America go to Paris to become French chefs. They are willing to serve apprenticeships of two or three years, because they can command three times the wages after they have had this experience.

The applicants for these positions so outnumber the vacancies that many a man has to wait several years until he is given a chance. A man before leaving will often ask that his position be handed over to a brother, or a cousin, who is anxious for the same training.

The head chefs in all the large hotels and restaurants are French men, so foreigners can only expect subordinate places, whatever their experience may be. A man seeking this training must promise to stay two years at least, or the head chef will refuse to consider him. In some kitchens a man receives no wages during his entire apprenticeship. In other places they are paid $2 or $3 after the first year. Their training is excellent; only the fewest fail to make good cooks. If they have never done any cooking they are set to work washing dishes, pots, and pans. Where they have already had considerable experience they are made assistant fish cooks, meat or pastry cooks.

Head Chef Hard Master.

A short interview with men who have had this training shows some interesting facts. One man says:

"The head chefs in some of the first hotels are real masters and most exacting ones. They have all gone through a hard school and expect the men who work under them to enjoy similar experiences. A man who cannot curb his temper, stand rebuke without answering back, and follow orders implicitly will not hold a place in these kitchens long. These men are too busy planning dishes and seeing that they turn out well to nurse wounded feelings."

Nowhere are employers more exacting, for head chefs, in contrast to their subordinates, get good salaries. They look upon their work as a fine art, for in no other country is dining made such an art. Most of these men have been in the business fifteen or twenty years. The great restaurateurs, such as Foyer, Voisin, and Joseph, came up from the ranks of chefs. Fayet is a home restaurateur. He takes the same pride in his establishments that an artist does in his paintings. Though he is rich and could retire, he is happiest when pleasing his guests. Frederic is the master of the school; he is an artist at preparing game. He is master of the duck. It takes three ducks for an order; two birds are used for the sauce that is prepared on a chafing dish. If guests compliment this chef on his cuisine he answers modestly that he has learned well. He was chef at [illegible] for many years.

Some Dishes Cost $100.

Some of these chefs have been known to spend $100 on making a single dish, but they can prepare excellent dishes for almost nothing. They all have their specialties and never imitate one another. They have certain dishes that no one outside of the house could make if they tried.

"Though many of the large hotels in New York and throughout the east have French chefs, there are plenty of establishments preferring American cooks who have studied in Paris. Some of these men earn $3,000 to $4,000 a year, where their salaries were only one-third that sum before they had this training. Once a great chef was introduced to a man whom he had known years before. He was introduced as "M. Rean."

"I thought your name was Ryan," the man remarked, "as I remember it."

"It was Ryan when I earned $25 a month, but since it has become Rean I get $5,000 a year."

Crossways Store Gets Trade; Big Profits in Cigar Stores.

By Walter Goldsmith.

WHAT businesses occupy the corners? A man in almost any line of business, with perhaps the exception of a gambling room or a blind tiger, would prefer a corner location, but because of the additional rent of these favored locations he feels that he cannot afford it. But certain lines of business seem to have a special fondness for the corner location.

Saloons take up many corners because their owners like to catch the thirsty wayfarers from all directions. Because of the great number of saloons in Chicago it would seem the saloons occupy the corners more than any other line of business. The cruel father depicted by the temperance reformers and "the che-ild is in London" style of melodrama always is either going to or coming from the corner saloon. But the percentage of corner saloons to the whole number is not so great as in some other lines.

Pay Most for Luxuries.

Cigar stores, that is stores exclusively devoted to My Lady Nicotine, also have a fondness for the corner locations. This is particularly the case within the loop, and one large company seems to make it a matter of business policy to locate its stores on the corners wherever possible.

Little fruit stores also cluster about the corners, even though the higher rent must wring the souls of the thrifty proprietors. From the nature of these businesses, it would seem that only the businesses dealing in goods that are usually called luxuries can afford to pay the higher rent of the corner store. But such is not the case. Grocers also seek to locate on the corners and seem to be able to thrive even with the increased cost of the rentals.

Besides these lines the drug stores also hustle for the corner lots. It is impossible to find the exact percentage in each of these lines, but from the comparative number of saloons, groceries, and drug stores it would seem that a greater percentage of drug stores occupy corners than any other line.

Tobacco Pays High Rents.

Of course, the desire of all these businesses for a corner location causes the rentals to go up just as in any other case of large demand and small supply, and as the public pays no more for its goods at the corner store, the proprietor does not feel the increased rent owing to the increased business and the land owner receives more rent, it appears to be a good thing for all concerned.

As in most of the saloons, grocery stores, drug stores, and even the fruit stands, cigars are handled as a side line, it would appear that the land owner must thank tobacco for being the patron goddess of the crossways.

Always Punctual; No Sunday Sleep.

By R. C. Brown.

A GOOD train conductor admires the accuracy of his watch above most of the things in this life. It is a sort of passion with him and he gives his watch as much care as his wife would give the baby.

One old trainman, who has five gold bands on his coat sleeve, which stands for twenty-five years' service on one railroad, goes even more to the extreme than most of his fellows in this respect. He has an old Swiss watch which belonged to his father. It has never run down since it was wound up for the first time, some fifty years ago, and it has never been more than a half minute out of the way.

Last Saturday the conductor brought his train in for the last time that week, as he laid off on Sunday.

A friend of his met him as he was going to the office to report his train.

"Work over?" he queried.

"Yep," snapped the conductor, as shortly as his ticket punch.

"Well, I suppose you take a good rest every Sunday. Sleep all day, don't you?" questioned the friend.

"No, I get up at 6 every Sunday morning, just the same. I'd like to sleep and I hate to set the alarm at 6 every morning in the week. If it was only an hour later on Sunday I think I might enjoy it more."

"Well, why don't you sleep an hour later, seeing your time's your own and you don't have to go to work?"

"Can't," sighed the conductor.

"Why not?"

"Have to get up to wind my watch."

HAVE YOU A BAD SORE?

If so, remember these facts—Zam-Buk is now the most widely used balm in Canada, yet four years ago it was unknown here! Why has it become so popular? Because it heals sores, cures skin diseases, and does what is claimed for it. Why not let it heal your sore?

Remember that Zam-Buk is altogether different to the ordinary ointments. Most of these consist of animal fats. Zam-Buk contains no trace of any animal fat or any mineral matter. It is absolutely herbal.

Remember that Zam-Buk is at the same time healing, soothing, and antiseptic. Kills poison instandly, and all harmful germs. It is suitable alike for recent injuries and diseases, and chronic sores, ulcers, etc. Test how different and superior Zam-Buk really is. All druggists and stores at 50c. box. You are warned against harmful substitutes and imitations.

Mr. Thos. Foster, who was visiting his friends in Manvers, returned home on Sunday.

The congregation of Cavanville Methodist church are making extensive improvements to the church shed. They are having a cement wall two or three feet high built all around to support the shed in place of the old-fashioned cedar posts; also a new roof will be put on. AGED RESIDENT GONE.

An old pioneer of Manvers passed away last week in the person of Robt. Fallis, aged 78 years. Since leaving his farm at Manvers Station he has been leading a retired life in Bethany. On May 31st he had been hoeing in the garden, during the day, when towards evening he complained of not feeling well and about six o'clock he passed away. The funeral took place to Fallis cemetery, Manvers, on June 2nd, attended by a large concourse of sorrowing friends.

Harry Tinney, of Cavanville, who had the misfortune to break a small bone in his leg recently, has recovered sufficiently to be able to walk around on crutches.

A MEAN MAN.

A prominent member of Cavanville church after attending service there on Sunday night, made the discovery that some unscrupulous party had been kind enough to exchange an old whip for his new one. This is the second time this has occurred to the above gentlemen during the last year or so. It is rather annoying to have one's poultry yard depleted occasionally and various small articles around the place removed. But it has come to a poor pass when a man can't go to church and feel that his property, which is tied out in the church shed is secure from the depredations of such vandals. Such unscrupulous persons as those would rob the collection plate if they had a chance.

A picnic will be held at Matchett's school house on Saturday next. A baseball match between Carmel and Millbrook will be the principal feature.

Mr. and Mrs. Nill, jr., were the guests of their parents, Mr. and Mrs. Nill, sr., of Cavan.

DRAINAGE EXPERT WILL GIVE PRACTICAL DEMONSTRATION

Everything is shaping up nicely for the Farmers' Institute picnic, which has been arranged to be held on Friday afternoon, June 17th, in connection with the annual meeting of the West Peterborough Farmers' Institute at Mr. John H. Garbutt's splendid farm on the 5th concession of Smith township. A most interesting time is expected. The Women's Institute from Lakefield are joining in with the Farmers' Institute for the occasion.

The order of events for the afternoon will be the business of the annual meeting of the Institute, a drainage demonstration by Mr. H. C. Duff, of Norwood, the district representative of the Department of Agriculture, and a picnic which will be held later on in the afternoon.

The annual meeting is called for two o'clock sharp. As soon as the business part of the meeting has been proceedsed with the drainage demonstration will take place. It is expected that Mr. Simpson Rennie, the well-known authority on agricultural matters, will be present, as well as a number of other agricultural experts.

The ladies are providing baskets. A good time is considently expected. Do not fail to come to it and bring your friends to this outing in the interests of better farming in the community.

Remember the date, Friday afternoon, June 17th.

DEATHS TERRIBLE TOLL THROUGH CLOUDBURST

Terrible Disaster is Reported From District Around Lugos, and King Peter, of Servia, Who is Conducting the Relief Work in His Country Says Dead Will Number Four Hundred.

Budapest, June 17.—Nearly 300 persons were killed and several villages annihilated by a cloudburst yesterday in Krasso-Szoreny, County of Hungary, bordering on Transylvania, Roumania and Servia. The capital of the county, which is mainly peopled by Roumanians, is Lugos.

It is expected that the death roll will be greatly increased when communications which have been almost completely cut off, are restored. Bridges, telegraph and telephone wires in the district have been destroyed, and it feared that many of the survivors of the flood will die of starvation or exposure before it is possible to send assistance.

Eighty persons have been drowned in the overflowing of the Hungarian River Nera, according to despatches received here yesterday.

Swiss Towns Inundated.

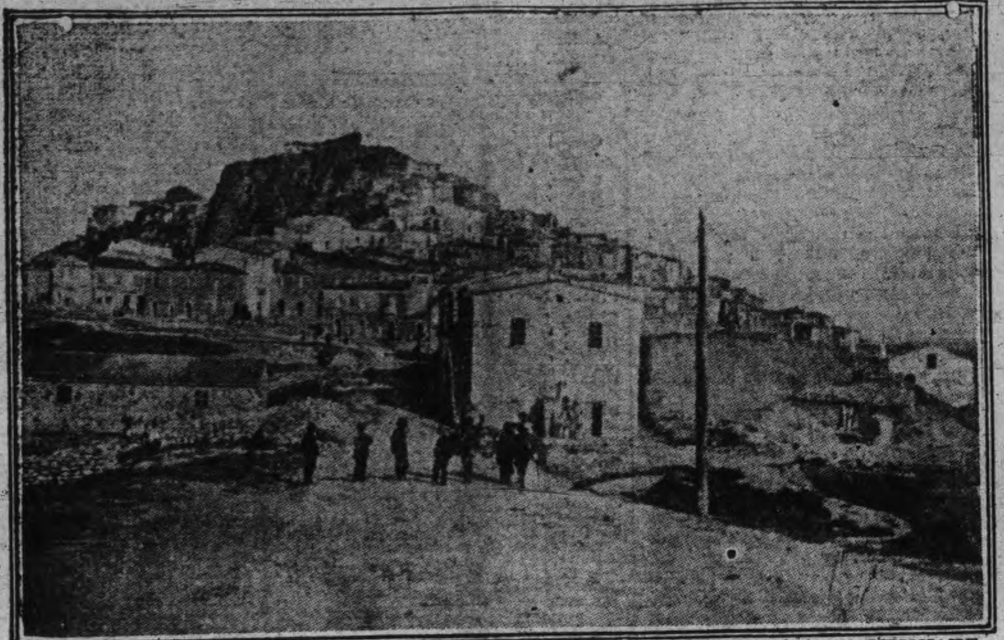
Berne, June 17.—All the lowlands of western Switzerland are now submerged. The towns of Aldorf, Zurich, Lucerne, Etraz, and Aarau, are partially under water, and a number of buildings have collapsed. A factory at Aldorf collapsed, killing 11 employes, mostly children. Twenty have been drowned.

Town Destroyed.

Constantinople, June 17.—The town of Hassankoleh, North of Erzerum in Asia Minor, has been destroyed by a flood, and four hundred of its inhabitants drowned, according to messages from there last night.

Four Hundred In Servia.

Belgrade, June 17.—Reports received yesterday from King Peter, who is personally conducting the relief work in the flooded Morava River valley, indicate that between four hundred and five hundred persons have lost their lives, and that at least twenty towns have suffered heavy loss, besides incalculable damage in the rural districts.



VIEW OF CALITRI, SHOWING ANCIENT CASTLE DESTROYED BY THE EARTHQUAKE.

Rome, June 17.—While a more or less complete survey of the district affected by the earthquakes shows that the damage was not as great as the first reports indicated, it has also increased the list of fatalities. The roll of dead will be more than double what was at first believed.

Calitri, as early reports indicated, suffered most, the section of the city which is situated on the hill slope being wrecked. The old castle, one of the sights of the town, is a mass of ruins. Forty persons were caught in the debris and killed. An equal number were injured. Some of the dead are still buried in the ruins. A child of two years was found uninjured in the ruins of its home, in which its parents had been killed.

At San Fele only two buildings were shaken down. Eleven persons were caught in the wreck. Six were killed.

The panic in the districts of Avellino and Potenza was great. Many houses were more or less damaged.

SHOULD ORGANIZE EARLY IS MR. BORDEN'S ADVICE

Third Picnic of Opposition Leader Proves a Splendid Success—Riding Associations Should Have Their Strongest Men in the Field Long Before Date of Election is Announced—Officers Elected.

Ingersoll, June 17.—At the combined picnic of the Ingersoll and South Oxford Conservative Associations yesterday, R. L. Borden was splendidly received. He was met at the railway station by representatives of the two associations, and before lunch attended the annual meeting of the South Oxford association. There he advocated the institution of clubs with the end of bringing in the young men.

"Make them acquainted with the past record of the Liberal-Conservative party; enlist their enthusiastic sympathy in the Conservative cause of to-day, for youth counts so much as an assurance of victory," he said.

"Secondly, I would urge you to select your strongest candidate. It very often occurs that the strongest candidate refuses to come out. Get together and make him come. That is what we did in St. Anne's, Montreal. We made Dr. Doherty come out and the result was we won that seat.

"Again, do not leave the selection of the name to four or six or ten weeks before the election. Select him one year or 18 months or two years in advance. Every month you put off minimizes your chance of winning the election. I venture to say that in the last campaign we lost at least five ridings in this province because we did not get the strongest candidate, and at least another five because they were too late in the field.

"Lay these down, I ask you, as cardinal principles, and when you have chosen your strongest candidate, unless all signs of the times fail, he will come down to Ottawa to sit at the right and not at the left of the Speaker."

A committee was named to report on Aug. 1 on candidates for both Houses. Dr. J. B. Coleridge, Ingersoll, will probably be the standard-bearer for the Legislature.

HENDERSON'S LIFE IN THE BALANCE

Reserve Case Obtained by Mr. F. D. Kerr for the Youthful Murderer--Special Court to be Held at Osgoode Hall on Monday.

To-day Robert Henderson sits in his cell at the county jail. He has heard the carpenters at work in the court yard, at work erecting the scaffold on which the law has decreed that he shall give his life on Thursday, June 23rd.

His conduct is that of a man who does not fear to face the awful death which lies before him.

Six days more of life.

But wait!

His counsel, Mr. F. D. Kerr, is in Toronto putting forth his best endeavors to save a life, and he has succeeded in his initial step.

Yesterday Mr. Kerr made application to the trial judge, Mr. Justice Riddell.

He obtained a reserve case.

A special court will be held at Osgoode Hall on Monday next, at which Mr. Kerr's exceptions, made at the trial here, will be heard.

If unsuccessful, he will make an appeal to the Government officials for clemency.

LATE TICKS FROM WIRES

Earthquake shocks have been felt in Cordova, Valeria and Alusia.

The water in the St. John River is falling and the big timber drive is held up again.

Dr. H. A. Beatty of Toronto has been appointed chief surgeon of the C.P.R. eastern line.

The Manzell-Alcock Co.'s foundry in Chicago was destroyed by fire, causing a loss of $300,000.

The sale of the Dunsmuir coal property on Vancouver Island to Wm. Mackenzie, of Mackenzie and Mann, has been completed.

The British Foreign Secretary has expressed approval of the American movement towards preservation of peace and limitation of armaments.

Lightning struck the Court House at London, Ont., while the County Court was in session. The flagpole was shattered and the flag destroyed.

ROOSEVELT COMES HOME NEW YORK'S RECEPTION

A Triumphal Journey, During Which He Has Performed Prodigies of Valour and Has Talked a Great Deal, American Ex-President Will Get a Record Breaking Reception—Republicans Need His Aid.

New York, June 17.—Steaming across the broad Atlantic, her bows headed for the harbor of New York, is the Hamburg-American line steamer Kaiserin Auguste Victoria, and aboard her, feverishly awaiting the first glimpse of America, is a man who has completed a journey the like of which has no record in history.

That man is former President Roosevelt. Kings and queens, princes of royal blood, and notabilities of every nation have been his hosts and entertainers for months. Soon he will be face to face with an ovation at the hands of the people of the land of his birth, and this welcome bids fair to eclipse any he has been given since he left Africa months ago.

The people of the United States are preparing a welcome to Mr. Roosevelt as was never before, accorded to any citizen of this country. On Saturday morning New York harbor will be alive with boats crowded with Roosevelt admirers. An enormous flotilla will steam down the bay and the great liner will be conveyed to her dock amidst the screaming welcome of thousands of whistles and booming salutes from the guns of Forts Wadsworth and Hamilton.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

William Loeb, jr., who has been active in furthering the work of the reception committee, has arranged with the steamship company to bring the vessel to quarantine at precisely nine o'clock.

If the steamer falls behind her schedule during the crossing, the captain has orders to proceed under forced draught. When the Auguste Victoria reaches quarantine Mr. Roosevelt will board a revenue cutter which will take him to the Battery, where he will be received by Mayor Gaynor. From this point the procession will move up Broadway, to Washington square, through the square to Fifth avenue, to 59th street, where it will be dismissed.

Every day new conditions arise that make it more evident to the leaders of the Republican party that drastic measures must be taken if they are to win at the coming elections. The disputes and factional warfare within the ranks of the party have badly disintegrated it. They need a leader; therefore, the great anxiety to get the former President into the fray.

A Young Aeronaut.

Chicollithe, Ohio, June 17.—Breaking away from its moorings, a dirigible balloon belonging to Cromwell Dickson of Columbus, Ohio, soared to an altitude of half a mile above the city Wednesday, carrying with it Fred Meyers, 16 years old, while thousands of horrified spectators looked on.

The balloon drifted five miles west, and as the gas became partly exhausted, slowly came toward the earth. The boy crawled out to the extreme end of the framework, and when within ten feet of the ground, he dropped off safely. The balloon, when relieved of his weight, soared to a great height and disappeared.

WORKED ON MIDLAND R. R. UNDER SENATOR COX

Special to the Review.

Toronto, June 17.—Arthur White, late general freight agent of the G. T. R., died at his home here this morning in his 70th year. Mr. White was born in England and came with his parents to this country when quite young with the 15th regiment. He entered the service of one of the branches of what is now the Grand Trunk, and remained with that company until he retired about 8 years ago. Mr. White served for the company at Guelph and other places and was general manager of the Midland Railway, under the presidency of Hon. George A. Cox, when that line became part of the Grand Trunk. He leaves a widow.

The late Arthur White resided in this city for a period of between four and five years. At that time he was identified with the Grand Trunk Railway, and had been traffic manager on the Midland and Central divisions. He left here about ten years ago.

He was widely known and a man who was respected by all.

The funeral will be held on Monday at 2.30 o'clock from the late residence, 51 St. James street, Toronto.

SHOT HIMSELF IN HEAD; LEFT NOTE TO WIFE

Special to the Review.

Kingston Ont., June 17. — Fred Wirtz, trumpeter in A Battery R.C.H.A., shot himself in the head at the Iroquois Hotel about noon. He cannot live, his brains being torn open. He left a note for his wife, who resides at Ogdensburg, N. Y. He is about 40 years of age.

JEWISH STUDENTS REMAIN IN MOSCOW

St. Petersburg, June 17.—The Russian Senate yesterday granted the appeal of the Jewish pharmacists at Moscow who are subject to expulsion from the city on the ground that they are not practicing actively their profession, and ordered the repeal of the Ministerial circular dated July 23, 1909, under the authority of which the provincial authorities recently began to act.

The decision of the Senate that Jewish pharmacists may remain by virtue of their diplomas, even if not actually engaged in their profession, will have a wide application in many territories where a university degree is the sole title to residence of the Jews. The local pharmacists were subjected to expulsion, and thirty pharmacists and assistants at Rostov-on-the-Dan had been notified to quit the town.

Kiev, June 17.—Eighty-nine persons were expelled from Kiev yesterday. Twenty-six of these had been permitted to settle their affairs, while the others were given passports to a specified destination.

INDIANS FOR Q.O.R. PAGEANT

Toronto, June 17.—With whoops and shouts thirty-six Six Nation Indians said good-bye to the train which had brought them to Toronto to take part in the Queen's Own Pageant yesterday morning. It was the first time some of them had even been on a train.

Some were carrying bows and arrows, some Indian baskets, while all were typical of their race, save perhaps the chief, who, in conventional Derby hat and white collar, looks more like a well-tanned white man. The others were in motley garb, soft shirts, Stetson hats, mocassins, fringed coats, so that nearly everything that can be picked out as possible wearing apparel was worn.

The quaintest figure of the lot was John Mudturtle, an ancient warrior. His hair is long and grey, he stoops with age, but his eyes twinkled with pleasure as he surveyed his new surroundings.

A Jolly Evening

Miss Lillie McPhail, Miss Helena Caffry, Miss Helen Alyea and Miss Neva Davey were a merry quartette of Trenton young ladies who, with Miss May Wood and Miss Viola Preston, enjoyed a dinner in their honor given at the home of Mrs. Milligan, 591 Water street, last night. A very enjoyable hour was spent in music and recitations, [illegible]

SAW SUN AFTER DARK

Indianapolis, June 17.—Orville Wright made two flights, giving a spectacular exhibition of fancy driving. No other aviators entered would risk the unfavorable weather.

Wright ascended more than two thousand feet after dark. On reaching that altitude a light appeared far below the western horizon, and going still further up he was able to see the sun. The earth below was in darkness, yet he could look upon the light of day.

In telling of the flight, Wright said the sight was one of the most thrilling and awe-inspiring he had ever witnessed. He says that aviators soaring to high altitudes may often see the sun after it has gone down to the people below.

Engineers Put Out Fire.

Military Camp, Petewawa, June 17.—About nine o'clock yesterday morning the bush near the camp of the Toronto company of Engineers caught fire, and as a high wind was blowing, the camp was in danger of being wiped out. The men were out of camp at at work at the time. Capt. S. P. Biggs ordered the fire call sounded, and the men dropped their tools and came into camp at the double. Headed by Capt. Biggs, they caught up axes, spades and blankets and speedily had the fire put out.

CUT BELOW PREFERENCE

Ottawa, June 17.—It develops that the adoption of the French treaty has had the incidental effect of lowering the British preferential rate on one or two articles. The special schedule of the French treaty provides rates for light wines and for certain medicinal preparations, which are substantially below the rates hitherto provided in the British preferential tariff. As it would not do for France, Spain, Switzerland, Japan, and a host of other countries to enjoy rates below those accorded Britain, the preference has been lowered to the figures mentioned in the French treaty. The cut went into effect on February 1, the date of the proclamation of the French treaty.

Too Much Institutionalism.

St. John, June 17.—Rev. Dr. John A. Morrison, formerly of St. David's Church here, and for the last six years in charge of the First Presbyterian Church in Chicago, has resigned his pastorate there.

The reason for his resignation, according to Dr. Morrison, is his uncompromising antagonism to conditions in Chicago, which forces pastors of centrally located churches to be institutional heads, society presidents charity trustees, bond brokers, gymnasium directors, settlement workers, endowment solicitors, school officials and even bill collectors.

ADVERTISE IN THE REVIEW.

BIG ATTRACTION AT ROYAL THEATRE

The Perry Edwards Musical Comedy Company opened yesterday at the Royal and played to two large audiences last night. Their little skit entitled "The Isle of Gazook Gazee" evidently took with the audience, who were appreciative of the efforts of the two comedians, Perry and Edwards. All the songs given by the chorus are the latest, including the New York success, "My Little Kangeroo."

To-morrow afternoon two performances will be given in this popular play house, also the latest moving pictures.

New electric fans have been added, making it the coolest spot in town, and the lighting effects are unsurpassed. For a cool afternoon's or evening's enjoyment remember this: "If you have the Time and the Girl, the Royal Theatre is the Place."

NEW RAILWAY FOR NOVA SCOTIA

Halifax, N.S., June 17.—The Royal Gazette yesterday published an order of the Executive Council of Nova Scotia granting a charter to John B. Bertram, Toronto; Thos. Fogg, Toledo, Ohio; George Row and Siegmund Hirch, London, Eng., and associates in the Halifax and Eastern Railway Co., to build and operate a railroad from Dartmouth, Halifax Harbor, to Guysboro and Mulgrave, N.S., and from a point on the Intercolonial near New Glasgow to a point on the new line, also a branch from the latter to Country Harbor, Guysboro. The charter allows the company to engage in shipping lumber, mining and different lines of transportation business. The company is capitalized at three millions, divided into hundred dollar shares, and is to have free right of way over crown lands. The governor-in-council has power to appoint two directors, who are not shareholders.

The charter is to lapse if the company is not actually engaged in business in two years.

Sending Two Survey Parties.

Ottawa, June 17.—The Government despatched two survey parties to Hudson Bay Railway. They leave Quebec in a few days on the Government steamer Stanley.

The party will be in charge of W. J. Stewart, chief of the hydrographic survey, who will have as his assistants H. P. Parizeau and A. G. Bachand. The party wil be equipped with steam launches in order to travel closer in shore than would be possible without them.

MILITARY ORDERS RECENTLY ISSUED

Ottawa, June 17.—Militia orders issued yesterday contain the following: Earl Grey has appointed Lieut.-Col. H. H. McLean, M.P., one of his honorary ades-de-camp. Capt. W. L. Ross, 13th Regiment, is transferred to 2nd Dragoons with rank of provisional major. Capt. C. W. McKitrick, 27th Lambton, is permitted to resign his commission. Lieut. C. J. Inglis, 44th Regiment, is promoted captain. Capt. G. F. Gabriel, 36th is granted brevet rank of major. Lieut. W. L. Heath, 39th Regiment, is promoted captain.

The headquarters of B company, Middlesex Light Infantry, is transferred from Muncey to Melbourne, Ont., and the headquarters of D company, Lincoln and Welland Regiment, from Fort Erie to Bridgeburg.

TO MUCH WEIGHT ON THE TOP FLAT

Ottawa, June 17.—The union men of Ottawa at a meeting to be held to-night will probably pas sa resolution complaining that at the Government Printing Bureau the top flat is stored with 500 tons of type, books, paper, etc., and that the weight is too great, especially as the building is by no means a new one and many employes work there.

In view of the recent tragedy at Montreal, due to an immense weight at the top of the building, they want this looked into.

PLUMBER DIES AT HIS WORK

St. Catharines, June 17.—While working in the basement of a private house at Thorold, Richard Birbeck died suddenly of heart failure. Receiving no response to signals on a pipe, John McLaughlin, a fellow plumber, went below complaining to Birbeck about his faltering at his work so near quitting time. McLaughlin was horrified at the discovery he made. The man had been dead fifteen minutes when the doctor arrived.

Strathcona Favors Entente.

London, June 17.—Lord Strathcona has wired to the meeting for the promotion of the Anglo-German entente, that he greatly regrets his inability, owing to official engagements to be present. "Nothing can be nearer my wish than that the relations between England and Germany should be of a most friendly character, and anything that will do this will always have my warmest support," he wired.

Farms From Flier.

St. Louis, June 17.—A five-acre farm will be droped from the sky when the aeroplane flight from St. Louis to Kansas City is held in July. The Missouri Board of Immigration announced yesterday that before the aeroplanists leave St. Louis they would be provided with cards to drop along the route. One of these cards wil entitle the finder to five acres of Missouri land.

Manitoba Elections.

Winnipeg, June 17.—It is generally believed now that the Manitoba elections will come on July 11.

THE NEWS AS TOLD IN DESPATCHES

Will Stay In Ottawa.

Ottawa, June 17.—Sir Wilfrid Laurier, it is understood, has given up his intention of spending a week in his old home in Arthabaskaville, before starting his political tour of the west. Lady Laurier is looking after the Premier's personal arrangements for his trip, and prefers to remain in Ottawa until he goes away. While Sir Wilfrid is in the west, Lady Laurier will holiday in the country, probably at Arthabaskaville most of the time.

Long Horseback Ride.

Avon, N.Y., June 17.—Mrs. Herbert Wadsworth of this village, a member of the famous Wadsworth family and prominent in Washington society, is in good condition, after having broken the world's record for horseback riding in one day Wednesday, by her jaunt of 212.3 miles over the roads about here in 16 hours, 19 minutes. She used twenty mounts from her own stable in performing the feat.

A Peculiar Case.

Brampton, June 17.—Peter Brunet of Toronto won the suit which he brought against Leopold Roumegous of Cooksville, being awarded $382.50 damages. The case was a somewhat peculiar one. The jury were unanimous in favor of the plaintiff, who loaned the defendant some money in return for a promise of one-fifth of the damages, which Roumegous expected to get for the alienation of his wife's affection by a Toronto man. It was claimed the latter paid $800 as damages, but Brunet did not get his share.

Earl Grey at Bristol.

London, June 17.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—Earl Grey arrived at Bristol yesterdayfi but the national mourning prevented the intended banquet. The earl wired the lord mayor of Bristol: "I am much gratified by your kindest desire to do me honor, but am unable, as the representative of the crown in Canada, to take part in any public function until after the end of June." The civic reception yesterday was therefore an informal affair.

Conditions Improving.

Berlin, June 17.—The River Ammer is falling to-day, and it is expected the water-bound visitors at Oberammergau, including several hundred Americans, will be able to leave to-day.

Conditions in the valley of the river Ahr are greatly improved. It is not believed the deaths will reach over 150, though the property loss will be far heavier than at first thought.

After the German Market.

Berlin, June 17.—The Canadian Government and Canadian business men have been making vigorous efforts since the conclusion of the fiscal peace between the Dominion and Germany, to extend the market for Canadian products here.

There is reason to believe that the efforts to enlist support for the Canadian National Exhibition have failed for the present.

New C.P.R. Telegraph Line.

Montreal, June 17.—James Kent, manager of the C.P.R. telegraphs, yesterday morning announced that the company would build a line from Montreal to Barnesfield Creek, B.C., to lease to the Pacific Cable Co., which now have a line direct from New Zealand to Montreal.

Circus Train Wrecked.

Ebensburg, Pa., June 17.—The circus train composed of fifteen cars of the Frank A. Robbins shows, was wrecked one mile from here early yesterday on the Cambria and Cresson branch of the Pennsylvania Railroad. Two lions, an elephant, one leopard, one hyena, one jaguar and an ibex are reported to be at large as a result of the derailment. Ten [illegible] ployes were injured.

The entire country for miles around is in a state of terror. Many of the farmers and their families refuse to leave their homes and take up the search for the liberated menagerie beasts.

Executed Wrong Man.

Tchernigow, Russia, June 17.—The trial and condemnation to death of three men for the murder of an entire family named Buiknovsay last spring in the neighboring town of Pochep has revealed a judicial error by which an innocent man, the peasant Glusker, suffered death for the same crime.

A Dangerous Place.

St. Catharines, June 17.—In closing the County Court at Welland Judge Wells raised his voice against the open violations of law and order in the locality of the Fort Erie race track. He gave an instance of a respectable man who was robbed of $200 there by thugs.

Breach of Promise Case.

Barrie, June 17.—A breach of promise between two people somewhat advanced in years was settled out of court by the defendant, Patrick Sullivan, paying the plaintiff, Harriet McClure, a widow with a family, $1,250. Both parties came from Orillia.

THE DOG THAT WAS STUNG

A dog in Ashburnham knocked over a hive in its anxiety to find what was inside and when the bees got through with him he was dead. That is one of the penalties for butting in. Some people are like that dog and once in a while they get badly stung. However, this animal was not one of the wise old dogs of Ashburnham, Ontario, but a dog of Ashburnham, Essex, England. But chickens are wiser than dogs. They stand by the hive and when the drone comes out later in the season, ejected by the working bees, they stand near by and eat them. They can distinguish the working bee from the drone, for the latter has a peculiar hum. The bee with the business end is left severely alone.

UNIVERSITY EDUCATION

The Toronto Star of Wednesday says:

The Peterborough Review muses upon the destiny of the thousands of graduates turned out by the University of Toronto. Where do they go? The fact remains that in spite of the magnificent buildings that grace the university and college sites of Toronto it is only once in a while that a man is turned out that will cause more than a passing comment."

It is true that of the thousands of graduates of this university—or any other—only a few achieve distinction. But that is hardly an argument against higher education. A physician takes his university degree, and practises in a country village. He drives over many miles of rough roads in stormy weather, loses many a night's sleep, relieves many a pain, removes many an anxiety. His name may be unknown beyond the bounds of a township. But is his life a failure? He is doing just as useful work in his own sphere as the city specialist whose name is on every tongue.

That is hardly the point. Of the thousands turned out of the Universities and Colleges of the land, hundreds would have been more successful if they had spent less time in school and mastered some trade, entered some business or taken up land in the west. University training is excellent for those who desire a profession, but there are many who go to the university and spend three or four years without any object in view To them the time is worse than wasted. There have been Oxford scholars cleaning Toronto streets, and men whose only university was the University of Adversity who rode by them in carriages.

OUR STOREHOUSE

The stalks and the ears are ripening, and the apples in the orchards, the pears and peaches, the grapes of this fair Ontario of ours are taking shape, but the farmer will earn all he gets. Early in the morning when most of us are sleeping, he is out with his stock or in the fields. Late in the evening when we are hurrying home to get ready to come down town for a good time, he is toiling. But when his harvest comes he will reap.

Yes, nature is good and we do not need to go to the west to find it. Her storehouse is beyond the power of imagination, but she delivers no goods on tick.

We would like to be able to speak in public. Then let us get up and flounder about, forgetting our notes, and sit down disgusted and very red of face. But keep on and you will eventually get your heart's desire.

We would like to be writers, then write and rewrite, throw your soul into your pen. Use simple language and write.

We would like to be musicians, then practice, we wish to master technique, then practice, wish finer expression and better touch, then practice.

The way to learn a thing is by doing it, and most marked successes do one thing well.

We do not understand these mysteries, but we are ever alive to the fact that two jingling half dollars make a whole one.

This is a beautiful world if our thoughts are beautiful, and peace and love and happiness shine out from its million eyes. But if our thoughts are mean and insincere, we see insincerity and meanness, though it come with the voice of an angel or the eye of a god.

Yes, if we learn the lessons well, its a fine old school of ours this world, a supreme moment every day, and every moment supreme. There is some honor to be attained, some fame, some success to be secured right here, no matter how miserable the situation, how hard the times or obscure the place. The Northwest does not hold all the future.

CREMATION

In Berlin, Ontario, is a house in which seven victims have died of consumption. A minister in town says burn the place up. So does the Berlin News-Record, the Brockville Times and The Peterborough Review.

And why not cremate the dead? It is a gruesome thought that those we love the best shall some day feast the lordly worm. Why not remember them as we last saw them, and not as mouldering in the grave. Cremation is rapidly gaining ground. It is healthier, more sensible and does away with the possibility of one's being buried alive. Then, if we wish, we may scatter the ashes of the departed to the four winds of heaven, or keep them sacred relics of one who was once dear to us, dear, yes, perhaps dearer than life itself.

SHOULD GIVE NOTICE

If a man works by the week he is supposed to give a week's notice and if he goes without doing this he cannot recover his salary. It seems too bad that the firemen of Peterborough should have quit without giving notice, all questions of grievance aside. The authorities that appoint the firemen should see to it in the future that a clause is inserted somewhere making it compulsory to give a certain notice, so that Peterborough with its stores and factories may not be left at the mercy of men who are untrained in the way of helping to fight fires. The time should not be less than two weeks, for Peterborough should be at least as well protected against sudden severance of duties as the merchant or ordinary business man.

A REMARKABLE INCIDENT

Going into what he thought was an office in Chicago a year or so ago, David Kidd, Toronto, found himself in a resort where a girl asked him to buy her a drink. Kidd, who was a religious man, told her of the water of life. She wept. Then followed her life story. The faithful trust, the scoundrel, her leaving her home in Australia to cover her shame. Mr. Kidd took the girl's name and wrote to her father and found that he was still living. She was reclaimed and died. Now the man who offered the living drink is in Australia to secure one million dollars left him by the grateful parent. He will also get $125,000 to build a home for friendless and fallen girls in Toronto.

THE TEETH

A despatch from across the water states that in one school a careful examination revealed the fact that not one scholar possessed perfect teeth. Good teeth are a very material aid to good looks, while decayed teeth give not only a bad odor, but make otherwise handsome people oftimes repulsive. The inspection of heads is sometimes made, and reveals the fact that once in a while scholars are much alive. Why not extend the examination? A visit to the dentist should be made at least once a year for inspection and, if necessary, for operation.

MILLBROOK NEWS

From Our Own Correspondent.

Millbrook, June 15.—An interesting spectacle was afforded the townspeople of Millbrook on Wednesday morning when 144 carrier pigeons were liberated for a long flight of 500 miles to New York. The birds were shipped to the village by their respective owners for the contest.

The Millbrook Methodist Sunday school intend holding their annual excursion on August 2nd. This is an event which usually draws a large crowd.

Ed. Boyler has purchased the barber shop and pool room from Robt. Jackson, who is on the road travelling for a Toronto firm.

Quite a number of Millbrook people took in the Guelph excursion on Thursday. They report an excellent trip.

Mr. R. W. Clarke, superintendent of the Millbrook Methodist Sunday school, is going to attend the conference at Vancouver, B.C., this month in connection with Sunday school work.

About fifteen candidates presented themselves for confirmation at St. Thomas' church last Sunday. Bishop Reeve, of Toronto, conducted the service.

AIRSHIP PROPELLERS.

They Are Built Up of Layers of Selected Wood.

Propellers for airships are built of laminated wood—that is to say, of wood built up in layers.

For the making of a propeller six or eight feet in length there would be required to begin with a stick of timber six inches or thereabout square, and such a stick of solid wood, however perfectly seasoned, might check or crack. For this reason the propeller is built of laminated wood, of strips of selected and perfectly seasoned wood of the required width, which are planed down to the requisite thickness and then glued together under pressure, making a practically solid stick.

Some airship propellers of laminated wood have been made with the laminations all of spruce. One New York concern making propellers produces them also of a combination of ash and mahogany.

The shaving out of the blades from this stick, each of precisely the required taper, pitch and thinness and the two exactly alike, is work that calls for the greatest patience, care and skill. The perfect propeller in its finished state is a beautiful example of good workmanship.

A six foot propeller of laminated wood, its weight six and a half pounds, costs $50; a seven foot propeller, weight nine pounds, $60, and an eight foot propeller, twelve pounds, $70.

For model airships there are made, also of laminated wood, but these commonly all of mahogany, little propellers from ten to twelve inches in length and accurate in pitch and finish. They sell at from $1 to $7.

Among the full sized propellers the greatest demand is for those measuring seven feet. From the orders thus far filled and now in hand the propeller makers are looking for a greater activity than ever in flying machines in the coming season.—New York Sun.

Sham Jewelry.

"This is the age of sham and make believe in the jewelry world," says a woman writing in the Fremdenblatt, "and the people who have any doubt on that score should go to Paris and be convinced. The makers of imitations are turning out better work than ever before, and the easily detected sham has faded away before articles which baffle many people. The 'superior quality' of these alleged jewels has made women courageous. They go in ankle deep with a small pin, and when they feel sure that the deception is undiscovered they wade with a brooch and, rejoicing in the sensation, are soon in deep water with a diadem. They are not cheap, these latter day gems, but they are within the reach of the people who wish to shine by their luster. The housemaid may wear them by sacrificing her savings, but on her person they would quickly be recognized. In that respect the mistress has the advantage over the maid."

Great Guns.

Sir A. Trevor Dawson makes this comparison to show the great strides made in modern ordnance in forty-five years: In 1864 the most powerful twelve inch gun was a muzzle loader, 12 calibers long, weighing 23.5 tons, using a charge of 85 pounds of powder and discharging a projectile of 614 pounds with a muzzle velocity of 3,000 feet per second. It could perforate 16 inches of wrought iron at the muzzle and 8 inches at a range of 6,000 yards. In 1909 the twelve inch gun had become a breechloader, 50 calibers long, weighing 70 tons, using a projectile of 850 pounds discharged with a muzzle velocity of 3,000 feet per second and capable of penetrating 52 inches of wrought iron at the muzzle, 37 inches at a distance of 6,000 yards and 17.5 inches at 24,000 yards.

Misfit Names.

Talking of family names, the new issue of the London directory provides some curiosities. Sebastian Bach is a horse dealer, Robert Bruce and John Bunyan are greengrocers, John Milton is a chandler and James Boswell a mason. William Shakespeare is the name of a barrister, a tailor and a van builder. There is a Crusoe and also a Gulliver. Julius Caesar is a chemist, Livy keeps apartments, Homer is a lighterman, Pinder an electrical engineer. Mars retails beer, and Venus, not inappropriately, sugar candies. Francis Bacon is an architect and Bayard a dairyman. And what could be better for the name of a saddler than Whippy?—Square Deal.

The Banana In Paris.

The banana has become popular in Paris and is sold freely in the streets. The increasing popularity of the fruit is amply justified, says a Paris paper, for Dr. Max Makowsky in Naturopath gives the following analysis of the fruit: 4.75 per cent of carbureted hydrogen, 19.50 per cent of alimentary salts, 1.75 per cent of cellulose and 74 per cent of water. The doctor adds that all that is necessary for sustenance can be obtained from the banana and bread and butter. The Parisian journal suggests that it would be interesting to know upon what the doctor himself subsists.

The New Compass.

For the purpose of securing clearness, simplicity and precision in the application of compass errors the hydrographic office of the United States navy has adopted a new form of compass on which there is no north, south, east or west, but which consists of a circle divided into 360 degrees, beginning with 0 at the true north point and reading to the right.—Popular Mechanics.

Nuneaton Cattle and Pleasure Fair, which has been held uninterruptedly since 1329, was held last week.

Some good cows sold from $50 to $60, with the medium grades at $35 to $45 and common down to $30.

The Mystery of The Yellow Room

By GASTON LEROUX

COPYRIGHT, 1908, BY BRENTANO'S

"It is a little my fault," said M. Darzac. "I happened to remark to the examining magistrate yesterday that it was inexplicable that the concierges had had time to hear the revolver shots, to dress themselves and to cover so great a distance as that which lies between their lodge and the pavilion in the space of two minutes, for not more than that interval of time had elapsed after the firing of the shots when they were met by Daddy Jacques."

"That was suspicious evidently," acquiesced Rouletabille. "And were they dressed?"

"That is what is so incredible. They were dressed completely—not one part of their costumes wanting. The woman wore wooden shoes, but the man had on laced boots. Now they assert that they went to bed as half past 9. On arriving this morning the examining magistrate brought with him from Paris a revolver of the same caliber as that found in the room, for he couldn't use the one held for evidence, and made his registrar fire two shots in the yellow room while the doors and windows were closed. We were with him in the lodge of the concierges, and yet we heard nothing—not a sound. The concierges have lied, of that there can be no doubt. They must have been already waiting not far from the pavilion—waiting for something! Certainly they are not to be accused of being the authors of the crime, but their complicity is not improbable. That was why M. de Marquet had them arrested at once."

"If they had been accomplices," said Rouletabille, "they would not have been there at all. When people throw themselves into the arms of justice with the proofs of complicity on them, you can be sure they are not accomplices. I don't believe there are any accomplices in this affair."

"Then why were they abroad at midnight? Why don't they say?"

"They have certainly some reason for their silence. What that reason is has to be found out, for, even if they are not accomplices, it may be of importance. Everything that took place on such a night is important."

We had crossed an old bridge thrown over the Douve and were entering the part of the park called the Oak grove. The oaks here were centuries old. Autumn had already shriveled their tawny leaves. This place, which mademoiselle found cheerful and in which she lived in the summer season, appeared to us as sad and funereal now. The soil was black and muddy from the recent rains and the rotting of the fallen leaves. The trunks of the trees were black, and the sky above us was low, as if in mourning, charged with great, heavy clouds.

And it was in this somber and desolate retreat that we saw the white walls of the pavilion as we approached. It was a queer looking building, without a window visible on the side by which we neared it. A little door alone marked the entrance to it. It might have passed for a tomb, a vast mausoleum in the midst of a thick forest. As we came nearer we were able to make out its disposition. The building obtained all the light it needed from the south—that is to say, from the open country. The little door closed on the park. M. and Mlle. Stangerson must have found it an ideal seclusion for their work and their dreams.

The pavilion had a ground floor which was reached by a few steps, and above it was an attic, with which we need not concern ourselves. The rooms of the pavilion were as follows:

The yellow room, with its one window and its one door opening into the laboratory.

The laboratory, with its two large barred windows and its doors, one serving for the vestibule, the other for the yellow room.

CHAPTER VI.

ROULETABILLE TOOK FROM THE CRUCIBLE AND HELD UP A PIECE OF HALF CONSUMED PAPER.

The lavatory, between the vestibule and the yellow room.

Besides these chambers there was a flight of stairs leading to the attic. The only chimney was the large one in the laboratory.

Before mounting the three steps leading up to the door of the pavilion Rouletabille stopped and asked M. Darzac point blank:

"What was the motive for the crime?"

"Speaking for myself, monsieur, there can be no doubt on the matter," said Mlle. Stangerson's fiance, greatly distressed. "The marks of the fingers, the deep scratches on the chest and throat of Mlle. Stangerson, show that the wretch who attacked her attempted to commit a frightful crime. The medical experts who examined these traces yesterday affirm that they were made by the same hand as that which left its red imprint on the wall—an enormous hand, monsieur, much too large to go into my gloves," he added, with an indefinable smile.

"Could not that blood stained hand," I interrupted, "have been the hand of Mlle. Stangerson, who, in the moment of falling, had pressed it against the wall and, in slipping, enlarged the impression?"

"There was not a drop of blood on either of her hands when she was lifted up," replied M. Darzac.

"We are now sure," said I, "that it was Mlle. Stangerson who was armed with Daddy Jacques' revolver, since she wounded the hand of the murderer. She was in fear, then, of somebody or something."

"Probably."

"Do you suspect anybody?"

"No," replied M. Darzac, looking at Rouletabille.

Rouletabille then said to me:

"You must know, my friend, that the inquiry is a little more advanced than M. de Marquet has chosen to tell us. He not only knows that Mlle. Stangerson defended herself with the revolver, but he knows what the weapon was that was used to attack her. M. Darzac tells me it was a mutton bone. Why is M. de Marquet surrounding this mutton bone with so much mystery? No doubt for the purpose of facilitating the inquiries of the agents of the police. He imagines perhaps that the owner of this instrument of crime, the most terrible invented, is going to be found among those who are well known in the slums of Paris who use it."

"Has a mutton bone been found in the yellow room?" I asked him.

"Yes, monsieur," said Robert Darzac, "at the foot of the bed, but I beg of you not to say anything about it." (I made a gesture of assent.) "It was an enormous mutton bone, the top of which, or, rather, the joint, was still red with the blood of the frightful wound. It was an old bone, which may, according to appearances, have served in other crimes. That's what M. de Marquet thinks, who has had it sent to the municipal laboratory at Paris to be analyzed. In fact, he thinks he has detected on it not only the blood of the last victim, but other stains of dried blood, evidences of previous crimes."

"A mutton bone in the hand of a skilled assassin is a frightful weapon," said Rouletabille, "a more certain weapon than a heavy hammer."

"The scoundrel has proved it to be so," said M. Robert Darzac sadly. "The joint of the bone found exactly fits the wound inflicted. My belief is that the wound would have been mortal if the murderer's blow had not been arrested in the act by Mlle. Stangerson's revolver. Wounded in the hand, he dropped the mutton bone and fled. Unfortunately the blow had been already given, and mademoiselle was stunned after having been nearly strangled. If she had succeeded in wounding the man with the first shot of the revolver, she would doubtless have escaped the blow with the bone. But she had certainly employed her revolver too late. The first shot deviated and lodged in the ceiling. It was the second only that took effect."

Having said this, M. Darzac knocked at the door of the pavilion. I must confess to feeling a strong impatience to reach the spot where the crime had been committed. It was some time before the door was opened by a man whom I at once recognized as Daddy Jacques.

He appeared to be well over sixty years of age. He had a long white beard and white hair, on which he wore a flat Basque cap. He was dressed in a complete suit of chestnut colored velveteen, worn at the sides; sabots were on his feet. He had rather a waspish looking face, the expression of which lightened, however, as soon as he saw M. Darzac.

"Friends," said our guide. "Nobody in the pavilion, Daddy Jacques?"

"I ought not to allow anybody to enter, M. Robert, but of course the order does not apply to you. These gentlemen of justice have seen everything there is to be seen and made enough drawings and drawn up enough reports"—

"Excuse me, M. Jacques, one question before anything else," said Rouletabille.

"What is it, young man? If I can answer it"—

"Did your mistress wear her hair in bands that evening? You know what I mean—over her forehead?"

"No, young man. My mistress never wore her hair in the way you suggest, neither on that day nor on any other. She had her hair drawn up, as usual, so that her beautiful forehead could be seen, pure as that of an unborn child!"

Rouletabille grunted and set to work examining the door, finding that it fastened itself automatically. He satisfied himself that it could never remain open and needed a key to open it. Then we entered the vestibule, a small, well lit room paved with square red tiles.

"Ah, this is the window by which the murderer escaped!" said Rouletabille.

"So they keep on saying, monsieur; so they keep on saying. But if he had gone off that way we should have been sure to have seen him. We are not blind, neither M. Stangerson nor I nor the concierges who are in prison. Why have they not put me in prison, too, on account of my revolver?"

Rouletabille had already opened the window and was examining the shutters.

"Were these closed at the time of the crime?"

"And fastened with the iron catch inside," said Daddy Jacques, "and I am quite sure that the murderer did not get out that way."

"Are there any blood stains?"

"Yes—on the stones outside—but blood of what?"

"Ah," said Rouletabille, "there are footmarks visible on the path! The ground was very moist. I will look into that presently."

"Nonsense!" said Daddy Jacques. "The murderer did not go that way."

"Which way did he go, then?"

"How do I know?"

Rouletabille looked at everything, smelled everything. He went down on his knees and rapidly examined every one of the paving tiles. Daddy Jacques went on:

"Ah, you can't find anything, monsieur. Nothing has been found. And now it is all dirty. Too many persons have tramped over it. They wouldn't let me wash it, but on the day of the crime I had washed the floor thoroughly, and if the murderer had crossed it with his hobnailed boots I should not have failed to see where he had been. He has left marks enough in mademoiselle's chamber."

Rouletabille rose.

"When was the last time you washed these tiles?" he asked, and he fixed on Daddy Jacques a most searching look.

"Why—as I told you—on the day of the crime, toward half past 5—while mademoiselle and her father were taking a little walk before dinner here in this room. They dined in the laboratory. The next day the examining magistrate came and saw all the marks there were on the floor as plainly as if they had been made with ink on white paper. Well, neither in the laboratory nor in the vestibule, which were both as clean as a new pin, were there any traces of a man's footmarks. Since they have been found near this window outside, he must have made his way through the ceiling of the yellow room into the attic, then cut his way through the roof and dropped to the ground outside the vestibule window. But there's no hole, neither in the ceiling of the yellow room nor in the roof of my attic; that's absolutely certain. So, you see, we know nothing—nothing. And nothing will ever be known. It's a mystery of the devil's own making."

Rouletabille went down upon his knees again almost in front of a small lavatory at the back of the vestibule. In that position he remained for about a minute.

"Well?" I asked him when he got up.

UNFORTUNATE CHILD DIED FROM SCALDS

Thomas Irvin Hickson was scalded to death yesterday.

The accident took place when the little fellow, who was only four years old, stumbled and fell into a bucket of boiling water, which had just been taken from the stove. His sufferings were terrible.

The little lad is the son of Mr. and Mrs. D. H. Hickson, Ennismore, and the frantic parents did all they could to relieve his agony.

The end came at 6 o'clock this morning.

The remains will be buried to-morrow in the Ennismore cemetery, from the home of his parents.

RETURNED MISSIONARY SPOKE BEFORE CONVENTION

Miss Baskerville, Returned Missionary Told Many Interesting Things About the Conditions of the Hindoos—Yesterday Afternoon and Evening Sessions

RETURNED MISSIONARY.

At Wednesday evening's session of the convention, Miss Baskerville, who is home on furlough from India, gave an address on the revival which took place there. The speaker had many interesting things to say and she received an attentive hearing throughout.

MISS BASKERVILLE.

Miss Baskerville, whose home is in Dundas and who is on furlough from her mission field in India, was introduced by the chairwoman, Mrs. W. D. Scott. She had many interesting things to say and received an attentive hearing throughout her address. Miss Baskerville said that she liked to tell of the revival in India because it was one of the precious experiences of her life and also because a revival might also commence in Canada. The speaker held that the parliament of religions held in Chicago sixteen years ago at the World's Fair had been a mistake. Now the religion of India has obtained a footing here in Canada. Is it because we have been so slow in giving our religion to the heathen, asked Miss Baskerville.

CONVERTS TO HINDOOISM.

There had been many converts in Hindooism here and out in British Columbia and one of our own members said the speaker has joined the religion. What about the effect of this religion? The truest proof of what it does is to go to its own people and see what it has done.

In India the religion is responsible for having given women a very low place—just opposite to Christianity. The woman of India is of no consequence. She is not supposed to have any chance of salvation save through her husband.

It is responsible for the practice of the burning alive of the widow along with the dead body of her husband. Happily this practice has of late been done away with by reason of the steps taken by the British Government.

WIDOWS AT NINE.

It is responsible for dividing the people into castes, which is one of the greatest hindrances to the advancement of Christianity. It is responsible for the system of child marriage by which so many little girls are left widows. The statistics of ten years ago tell us that between the ages of five and nine, 64,000 young girls were married, and there were 175,000 between the ages of ten and fourteen.

It is responsible for all kinds of deception and fraud. Its temples are dens of iniquity and vice. It has kept the people ignorant and it is that kind of religion that has gained a foothold in the United States and Canada under a very thin guise.

NEVER SLEPT.

Speaking of the revival, Miss Baskerville said that prayer circles had been formed in missionary circles and our prayer in India was, O Lord send a revival and begin in me. She would never forget the second day of the revival. The children were assembled at prayer and the change came suddenly. It seemed as though they had never before realized His greatness. They looked into their own hearts and saw just what they were like. One night these children never went to sleep, but remained awake to make peace with each other.

SCOFFED THEN PRAYED.

Meeting were held. They went from the school to the church. The little girls were leaders and for forty days these meetings went on. The first Sunday the meeting began at eight o'clock in the morning and did not break up until one o'clock the following morning. Some came to scoff, but they too were impressed and remained to pray.

In these meetings the principal thing seemed to be confession. There was something peculiar about the manner in which the children acted. Prayer, singing and shouting was going on at the same time. Dr. Smith, who was was with us, said it was not hysteria, as was supposed by some, but that there was something supernatural about it.

In these meetings the principal thing semed to be confession. There was no visible leader, but all knew that God was the leader.

Soon afterwards they began to call God by a new name, which was the same as it was customary to call a kind father.

The one who really began it all was a little girl in the third grade of the school.

CONDITIONS IN INDIA.

Miss Baskerville made a plea for more efforts on behalf of Mission work. She said that each representative of the Baptist church in India had to look after 20,000 women and these women had to be reached in a hand to hand way.

We have to go right into these homes as it is impossible to get them together for a meeting, said the speaker, and we have to reach the rich as well as the poor. Both classes are ignorant. Some of the rich cannot even read.

The speaker outlined the position which the field was now in as regards the demands made upon the Baptist church for missionaries and gave the particular reason why the work was not advancing as well as it might.

It was the shortness of funds.

LACK OF MONEY.

Speaking of the case of one lady who offered herself for mission work, but who could not be sent to India because of the lack of funds, Miss Baskerville noted that in this case it would only have been necessary for the women of that church to give one cent a week.

Is this beyond the reach of Christian women, she asked.

PERTINENT QUESTION.

Can't we save 50c. on a hat? Can't we do with cheaper boots, gloves or do without a handkerchief or two?

We sing as if we would not withhold anything, but I think we do not live it out.

She did not ask to take a cent from home missions to give to foreign missions, but that all do their duty by both.

At the conclusion of the address the choir of the church gave a much appreciated number and the meeting was brought to a close by prayer.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The afternoon session was opened with devotional exercises, at which the Rev. J. S. Lafair presided. The moderator, Rev. Mr. Bonner, acted as chairman.

REV. W. CAREY SAGE.

Rev. W. Carey Sage delivered the annual sermon. It was a splendid discourse. It was distinctively timely, and one that could not but leave its impression on the auditors. As an eloquent testimonial of its worth, a resolution was afterwards moved, seconded and unanimously carried that Rev. Mr. Sage send the manuscript for publication in the Canadian Baptist. The mover of the resolution was Dr. W. J. McKay, managing editor of the Canadian Baptist.

DR. McKAY.

The next speaker was Dr. McKay, and he, in an interesting manner, spoke briefly of the monthly organ of the Baptist church in Canada, which he represented. Dr. McKay, in making some very commendatory remarks about the sermon, said that the Canadian Baptist stood for all the things which the speaker had brought out. He came with the greetings of its staff and to ask for the same support as had been given in the past, and asked that those in connection with the publication of it be remembered in prayer. The speaker complimented the church on having such a magnificent library.

He reminded his hearers that the Book Room could supply anything in the shape of good literature.

Dr. McKay paid a neat compliment to the Peterborough press. He said that he read one of the papers and thought it a very creditable one. People, he said, should read the local papers, but his opinion was that what was needed was a religious denominational newspaper. Such a periodical was the Canadian Baptist. It was not for any particular class of people, but for the whole Baptist denomination. The young people would receive great benefit, and the young people's page had been very much better during the past twelve months than it had ever been before.

Dr. McKay made an appeal for the Canadian Baptist on its own merits, and the able manner in which he placed his argument before the gathering was such that greater interest is sure to be taken in future.

Dr. Scott also made a few remarks about the Canadian Baptist.

His opinions, he said, were the same as given by the previous speaker. An increase of 3,000 subscriptions was looked for, and this, he felt, would be attained throughout the associations interested.

Rev. Mr. Picton and Rev. Mr. Brace asked regarding the matter of sending copies for distribution, and Dr. McKay answered that all that was necessary was for the ministers to notify the publishers.

REV DR. BATES.

Rev. Dr. Bates next gave an address on educational work, in which he particularly dealt with the benefits to be derived from the Boys' School, at Woodstock, Ont. At this school the young boy was trained much more effectively than in the local public schools. His spiritual well-being was looked after. This was not so much the case in the local schools.

At this school there were 136 young men preparing themselves for the ministry.

Questions brought up by Rev. Mr. Sage and Rev. J. R. Webb regarding certain pamphlets, brought Mr. McKay to the platform again, and answered certain charges made against the editor of the Canadian Baptist, and, judging by the applause at the conclusion of his remarks, his explanations were satisfactory.

THURSDAY EVENING.

One of the most important movements in the Evangelical churches at the present time is the Laymen's Missionary Movement.

Mr. W. C. Senior, who dealt with this subject, spoke enthusiastically and interestingly of the movement in its relation and importance to the Baptist denomination. The Laymen's Mission Movement believed that Jesus Christ was the worldwide Saviour. This was the foundation of the movement. We all knew Christ's admonition to preach the gospel in all parts of the world.

"The same gospel that has lifted you out of the pit and put your feet upon the Rock is the one that will convert India and China, and the other heathen nations of the world."

The message of God's book was a living, inspiring power, and if man accepted its teachings he would live.

The laymen's movement was not apart from the church, but a part of the church. The church was the agency of the movement.

The speaker knew that the personal touch of man to man was what was leading men to give their lives to Jesus Christ. It also deepened the spirituality of many Christians.

It was estimated that the cost of giving the gospel to a heathen soul was two dollars, and this was a small sacrifice for such an all important mission.

Following the address a splendid conference on young people's societies was led by Rev. H. H. Bingham.

THE LADIES' REPORT.

The committee also recommend that branches accept the following, either as part constitution or by-laws:—

RESOLUTIONS PASSED THURSDAY MORNING.

2. All collections taken at the convention shall, after the expenses of the convention are met, go to the local auxiliary.

3. Each district shall have a minute book containing not only the minutes of the convention, but an itemized account of expenditure.

4. Same as No. 6 in report district constitution.

5. Same as No. 7 in report, district constitution.

6. That branch officers and district organizers send a statement of their expenses to the branch treasurer not later than May 15th.

Notice of motion, re Board of Managers, act 5, section 2, read: "The officers of the Board of Managers shall consist of a president, vice-president, recording secretary, foreign secretary, home secretary, secretary of statistics and special objects, and a treasurer.

That, whereas, the Board of Managers, by legislation, requires the branch recording secretary to furnish the Outlook with quarterly reports of the work of the branch therefore, in order to give effect to this legislation in the best possible way, be it resolved, that it is the direction of this branch that the corresponding secretary of each auxiliary send a quarterly report to the organizer of the district, who shall, from such reports, furnish a condensed report for the branch secretary, not later than the first of June, September, December and March in each year. To be inserted in by-law.—Carried.

In recognition of the fact that the auxiliary superintendent of systematic and proportionate giving is an officer, and realizing that it would greatly assist the branch superintendent in her work, that we, the members of the Bay of Quinte branch, memorialize the board to include the name of the officer designated, on the printed schedules sent to auxiliaries for the annual reports.—Carried.

Whereas all the branches meet in the spring, and it is necessary to close the Mission Band year to correspond with the auxiliary, in order that their reports reach the branches, be it resolved that this branch memorialize the Board of Managers to change the last clause of article 4, constitution, for a Mission Band to read: "shall be elected annually before 30th April, instead of 20th September."

Also article 6 to read 30th April, instead of 20th September.—Carried.

Whereas the branch meeting is a place of education and inspiration, and the Mission Band is the training school for our young workers, be it resolved that we memorialize the Board of Managers to so amend article 10 to entitle the Mission Band to representation at the branch meeting.—Carried.

Whereas a rest fund collection is called for each year, and no explanation of this fund is given in the W. M.S. constitution, many contribute to it blindly, and possibly not as generously as they might do, therefore, Bridge St. auxiliary respectfully memorialize the General Board to give such information of the object and aim of this fund, as shall be satisfactory to all our members, but especially to those who are new to our work.—Carried.

Miss Ogden requests the branch to order the Monthly Letter from room 20, early in September.

Resolved, that we, the organizers of this branch do not approve of the appointment of district corresponding secretary, and further, would suggest that in order to assist the branch corresponding secretary, the Easter envelopes and other supplies, be sent to the organizers for distribution to the auxiliaries if she so desire.

BY THE LADIES.

The report of the above session was written by the Press Committee of the convention.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

The Review does not hold itself responsible for opinions expressed by its correspondents

To the Editor of the Review,

Sir,—As a loyal citizen of Peterborough, and one of those who are doing all that can be done to induce prospective excursionists to make Peterborough their objective point, I must express my surprise and regret, which is shared by all who have seen it, at the report written up in the Morning Times of the excursion people who came in from Unionville.

From what I can learn, the Otonabee Navigation Co. reap a large direct benefit from the presence of these people here, by taking them over the lift lock for the usual consideration and I am also informed that the proprietor of the Times paper is president of this company.

Will the Times please explain to its readers what brought about the moment of weakness when the report in question was made up?

Thanking you for this space, I beg to remain.

Yours,
BOUST PETER.

Will Fight In Reno.

San Francisco, June 17.—Rickard admitted he did not have the slightest hope of pulling off the fight in San Francisco, and that every day of indecision as to where it would take place merely increased his financial loss.

"If the court grants an injunction here I leave for Reno Sunday morning, and will immediately commence the erection of an arena there," he said. "My attorneys have advised me not to buck the governor and the attorney-general, but I have agreed to wait until Saturday."

While not yet ready to announce so officially, the promoter virtually admitted that the fight would take place at Reno.

PROTESTS TO BE DEALT WITH

A meeting will be held here tonight by the Midland Football League executive to deal with the protest entered by the Warsaw juniors. The club claims that Havelock in the game last friday played ineligible men.

The Havelock club have put in a counter protest against seven players of the Warsaw club.

ITEMS OF INTEREST FROM HAVEEOCK

Special to the Review.

Havelock, June 15.—Two small boys, aged only nine and twelve years of age, on Sunday afternoon last gained entrance to a local store and secured over five dollars ion cash from the cash register. They gained an entrance through a cellar window and took the most prominent part of the day for the job. On Monday they appeared before Magistrate Edmison at the police court here, but His Worship did not deal with the case, leaving it in the hands of the Havelock authorities to await his further instructions.

Thomas Edwards and Albert Chard, who were arrested at Cordova last week by County Constable Cochrane and Chief Bennett, of town, for the theft of a colt also appeared before the Magistrate. The case against Chard was dealt with first, resulting in his being dismissed. The charge against Edwards was left over until July 4th for hearing. Bail was allowed him, the amount being four hundred dollars, himself giving surety for two hundred dollars and two other sureties for one hundred dollars each.

The Court of Revision on the 1910 assessment roll was continued at the council chamber on Monday evening, with Reeve Knox, and Councillors Weese, Philips, Toman and Young present. The following changes were made:—

Campbell; Mr. Crawford, tenant, in George Scott's house; that F. Haig be assessed $125 for lot 190, and Wm. Spinks' name be taken off; that Wes. Stillman's assessment be lowered $50; that Jesse Campney's assessment on vacant lot be lowered to $125; that James Scott's assessment be lowered to $950; that Mr. McNichol's assessment be sustained and that it read $275 for land, $1,500 for building and $375 for business; that Wm. The total assessment on the roll is $328,553, made up of land assessment of $51,220; building assessment, of 262,798; business assessment of $10,187, and income of $4,350.

After the Court of Revision a council meeting was held, when the following accounts were ordered to be paid:—

Electric light for May $64.00
E. Fennel, telephone 60
M. Parcels, building walks 5.25

A communication was received from the Havelock Electric Light Co. notifying the council that they intended to cut out all the free lights.

The council decided on a rate to offer the company for these lights, and appointed Councillors Weese and Toman to present the proposition to the council.

PROPOSALS BY PROXY.

The Advantage a Chinaman Has In Case of a Rejection.

Dr. Isaac T. Headland, a resident of Pekin for many years, throws a new light on the new women of China in The Travel Magazine. Taking up the relations between the sexes and especially the Chinese method of getting a wife, the writer repeats a conversation with a young Chinaman who had recently become engaged to a Chinese maiden with whom he had never spoken.

"We students have a very great advantage over the old Chinese method of finding a wife and getting engaged," said my Celestial friend.

"What do you mean?" I inquired.

"Well, you see by the old Chinese method a man can never see his wife until she is brought to his home unless he can bribe the middleman to allow him to stand on the street corner and see her pass by in a cart."

"And what advantage do you have?"

"We see the girls in church," he answered. "They also can see us. We have sisters in the girls' school, they have brothers in the college, and when we go home during vacation we can learn all about each other."

"This is an advantage."

"In my judgment," he continued, "we have a better method than even you foreigners have."

"How is that?"

"Well, you see," he continued, "after we have selected the lady we want we can have a middleman go and ask her for us, while you have to go and ask the lady yourself."

"But," I objected, "we can get so much better acquainted by our method."

"Yes, that's true," he admitted, "but doesn't it make you awfully angry if you ask a girl to marry you and she refuses?"

It was necessary to admit that there were advantages in the middleman method which had never occurred to me, and, while I was not ready to acknowledge that his new found method was better than mine, I could still see that the force which brought it about was bringing woman out of her seclusion and placing her on a level with her brother and her future husband.

FINISHED MAN OF THE WORLD.

If not in diplomacy, at any rate in learning, manners and physical appearance Cardinal Merry del Val is an ideal prelate, writes Walter Littlefield. He works harder than anybody in the Vatican and has a precise, rapid manner in going through an immense amount of business. Every morning he has a half hour's conference with the Pope; every evening he receives all visitors who believe they have information which may be of value to the Pope or papacy. Merry del Val listens, makes notes, and politely dismisses them. Twice a week, Tuesday and Friday, he receives the ambassadors of the Catholic powers. The following description of his person, given by the Vicomte de Colleville, is suggestive:

"His figure is tall, slight, and graceful. He has a large forehead, a mouth with an amiable smile, and large, black eyes, which give to his expression something of sweetness and sincerity. From all his person there emanates a perfume of exquisite distinction—the charm and seduction of perfect manners. The sound of his voice is harmonious and his conversation brilliant and captivating. In a word, he is a finished man of the world."

Although the cardinal secretary of state has an apartment situated in the oldest and most beautiful part of the Vatican, neither his work nor his pleasures are confined to these precincts. At No. 11, in the Via della Valtellina, outside the Portese Gate, there is a rose-colored villa with high walls and spacious vineyards. It formerly belonged to the nuns of the Sacred Heart; it is now the playground of Merry del Val. There he entertains his social friends. They play bowls, sup in the open, or swing. Yes, the papal secretary of state actually has a swing at his villa and he is very fond of it.

He is also fond of automobiling, and often motors from his villeggiatura to Castle Gandolfo, or to Subiaco, Vicarello, or to the shores of Lake Bracciona. He is an expert swimmer, and by regular exercise keeps himself in the best physical condition.

The World's Largest Crab.

The gigantic Japanese crab, measuring twelve feet, is probably the largest crustacean in the world. It is a type of the spider crab, which inhabits the [illegible] of the group of islands forming the empire of Japan. The body portion is the size of a half bushel measure, while its two great arms, or "feelers," could easily encircle the figure of a man. Its eight arms, or legs, resemble huge bamboo poles and are extremely elastic, and if strung into one line they would reach to the top of a four storey apartment building. One of the extraordinary peculiarities of this crab is the faculty of assuming a disguise by affixing pieces of seaweed and sponges to the body.

Guarding the Cash.

The gypsies in some parts of Europe have a curious way of looking after the honesty of their money collector. The person intrusted with the mission of taking the hat around among the crowd has a living fly put into his left hand, while he holds the hat with his right. When he returns with the funds he must bring the fly back alive as a sign that he has not taken any money from the common property, but if the fly be wanting or even dead he does not get even his share of the money.

Pleasure of Wisdom.

"Your boy likes to go to school better than he used to," said the relative.

"Yes," answered Mr. Bliggins. "He's getting old enough to enjoy learning a lot of things so that he can come home and dazzle me with his superior knowledge."

The Pullman Car Co. were refused an injunction to prevent the lowering of sleeping car rates.

Tried to Withdraw Plea.

New York, June 17.—Although he was warned at the time he pleaded guilty of the gravity of his act and told that he could expect no mercy from the court, H. Levinson, indicted by the grand jury, of which J. D. Rockefeller, jr., is foreman, on the charge of having sold young girls into "white slavery," sought to withdraw his plea when he was brought up for sentence yesterday.

Judge O'Sullivan rebuked the prisoner, but granted his request for the assignment of a lawyer to look after his interests. The court deferred sentence and sent Levison back to the Tombs, where he has been held in default of $25,000 bail.

Western Man Suicides.

Valleyfield, June 17.—Wednesday morning a man about 35 years, small of stature and well dressed, was found dead in the New York Central yards, Valleyfield. It was evidently a case of suicide. Documents in his pocket would in dicate that his name was Owen O'Brien and that he recently resided at 186 Jarvis avenue, Winnipeg.

White Pass Steamer Sunk.

Dawson, Yukon, June 17.—The White Pass steamer Casca, carrying 65 first-class, 50 second-class passengers, 160 sacks of mail and 15 tons of merchandise, struck a rock and sank in Thirty Mile River, 12 miles south of the Hootalinqua. All the passengers were safely removed.

Reduced the Rate.

Almonte, June 17.—Because the municipal council of the town appropriated some $2,000 which belonged to the Almonte Electric Light Commission, also a municipal body, the commissioners reduced the electric light rate by 25 per cent.

The Bishop of Birmingham has given his hearty approval to the establishment of a hostel for laymen at St. Andrew's church, Bordesley.

Local Option movements would be needless if everyone understood that Regal Lager benefits but does not intoxicate. It quenches thirst delightfully, makes the appetite healthy, and aids digestion. Good at meals.

Cookery Points

Rhubarb is at its best at this time of the year, and this product of the garden has many uses not only for the table, but for medicinal purposes, says Marion Neil Harris. The part used the most is the foot stalk of the leaves. The roots take up many acids and are astringent; hence the value of the dried roots as a medicine. Rhubarb is a powerful zest giver. When merely placed in the mouth and left unmasticated there is a rush of the saliva from the glands to deal with the quantity of acid in the mouth. This is excellent in cases where the digestive fluids need stimulation. Any food taken will be absorbed through the pouring out of digestive fluids. Though a vegetable, rhubarb is used in every respect as a fruit. Eaten stewed, so that the acids are tart in it, the stalk acts as a foe to gout and to rheumatism, for it neutralizes the uric acid that causes these things. It is also a specific for the complexion. There are many ways of preparing it for the table, and the following recipes ought to be pleasing:

Rhubarb Sponge.

Line a mold with slices of sponge cake, pressed firmly around the inside. Fill up the mold with stewed rhubarb, not too moist, sprinkle with sugar; covering the top with more slices of cake, cover with a plate and press down with a weight for a few hours, when the juice of the rhubarb will be absorbed by the cake. Turn out very carefully, decorate with little pieces of angelica and serve with a nice custard.

Compote of Rhubarb.

Wipe the rhubarb with a damp cloth and cut it into lengths of four or five inches. Put into a saucepan five pounds of sugar with two pints of water. Bring quickly to boiling point and skim, and then boil till the sirup is quite thick. Then add the rhubarb and simmer gently till soft. Lift each length carefully and lay it on a glass dish. Then boil the sirup a few minutes longer. Let it cool. Then add a few drops of red coloring and pour over the rhubarb. Serve with cream and lady fingers.

Cookies For School Children.

Hungry school children love oatmeal cookies when they are just right. If mealy and dry they will have none of them; if candied, crisp and sweet they are eaten to the last crumb. Here is a recipe:

Cream together smoothly three-quarters of a cup of butter and one cup of brown sugar. Add to this half a cup of cream or milk and two eggs that have had the whites and yolks beaten separately and very stiff. Beat the whole carefully together and then stir in two cups of rolled oats. Beat again vigorously, and then add one cup of well sifted whole wheat flour.

Add a level teaspoonful of soda, one of salt and one each of cinnamon, cloves, nutmeg and a pinch of black pepper. Beat again and then drop from a large spoon on buttered tins and bake in a fairly quick oven.

The Window Shelf.

The housekeeper who has once learned the comfort of a shelf outside her kitchen window will never again be without one. Where there are outside shutters this should be low enough below the sill to enable them to close easily.

The shelf may be just a plain board, wide enough for pots and bowls, or if in an exposed position there should be a two inch rim around the edge.

For occasional use a shallow box nailed to the window in such a way that the inside of the box faces the kitchen is useful to put articles of food in that will overflow the refrigerator. The top and sides of box keep snow, rain and dust from the provisions, yet a low temperature can be maintained. This could not be used with outside shutters.

Matrimony Tarts.

Matrimony tarts is the odd name to an apple dessert of which there are many varieties. This particular apple tart or pudding calls for one dozen apples, a quarter pound of currants picked, washed and dried; two ounces of candied peel chopped fine, a little grated nutmeg, some sifted sugar and puff paste.

Pare, core and quarter the apples. Put them into a saucepan with a little water and stew them to a pulp, stirring frequently. Then add the currants, the chopped peel, sugar to taste and nutmeg.

Line a pudding dish with puff paste; pour the fruit, when it has cooled a little, into it; cover with crust, press the edges together all around, make a hole in the center and bake.

Where History Began.

Describing a visit to the tombs of the Egyptian kings, Albert Bigelow Paine in Harper's Weekly writes of "the splendid tomb of Amenophis II., of the eighteenth dynasty, who lived in the glory of Egypt, 1600 B. C., a warrior who slew seven Syrian chiefs with his own hand. The top of the sarcophagus is removed and is replaced by heavy plate glass. Just over the sleeper's face there is a tiny electric globe, and I believe one could never tire of standing there and looking at that quiet visage, darkened by age, but beautiful in its dignity, unmoved, undisturbed by the storm and stress of the fretful years. How long he has been asleep! The Israelites were still in bondage when he fell into that quiet doze, and for their exodus a century or two later he did not care. Hector and Achilles and Paris and the rest had not yet battled on the plains of Troy."

"Tried and True Layer Cake."

Cream one and three-quarter cups of sugar with one-half cup of butter, add three eggs and beat the batter hard. Stir in a cup of sour milk into which a generous pinch of baking soda has been beaten. Last of all, whip in lightly three cups of flour that has been sifted with two teaspoonsful of baking powder. Bake in three layers and put together with any kind of icing or filling.

Good Form

Tact is the highest type of good form, and it is a virtue that only needs exercising to become a fixed habit.

A woman of tact is one who feels that the story told to hurt your feelings is essentially bad form and inconsiderate of the feelings of others.

A woman of tact is the one who is courteous to old people, who laughs with the young and who makes herself agreeable to all women in all conditions of life.

A woman of tact is one who makes her good morning a pleasant greeting, her visit a bright spot in the day and her goodby a hope that she may come again.

A veritable woman of tact is the best type of a Christian, for her very consideration makes other women long to imitate her. Remember that to do your work as a woman of tact means more than speaking from platform or assumed elevation.

A woman of tact is one who is courteous under all circumstances and in every condition in which she may be placed. She is the woman who can receive the unwelcome guest with a smile so bright and a handshake so cordial that in trying to make the welcome seem real it becomes so.

A woman of tact is one whose love for humanity is second only in her life's devotion and whose watchword is unselfishness in thought and action.

By making self last it finally becomes natural to have it so.

The Chance Acquaintance.

The question is often asked about recognizing the man or woman whom unconventionality has allowed one to meet. There can be no set rule. For instance, a man may have rendered some great assistance in an accident or have protected you from rudeness in public. In this case it would be impossible to pass such a chance acquaintance without a civil nod or a smile of recognition should you happen to meet him again. But it must be remembered that in all cases an introduction is in order before friendship can begin.

Always remember that you do not know the mere acquaintance. Be cautious and endeavor to swing the conversation into impersonal channels. Men often laugh at the foolish girl who pours out her childish enthusiasms into their unsympathetic ears. Never talk or act in such a way as will cause shame or regret in the calm consideration of the next day.

Relation-in-law Duties.

When a girl marries it is the duty of her husband's family to give at least one reception in her honor, that she may meet their friends and be made welcome.

And it should not be forgotten that, even if the choice is what may be termed distasteful to his family, a man marries to suit himself, and it is a reflection upon all of them if they do not try to make the best of the matter and prevent remarks that are not complimentary. Such a course is far the more dignified for a mother and sisters of the man to take, and at the earliest opportunity it is proper to give a reception, inviting personal friends to meet the new relation-in-law.

Usually such an affair is held at night, in order that the men of those families invited may be present. Then cards are issued in the name of the father and mother of the bridegroom.

The Letter of Introduction.

When one gives a letter of introduction to any one it is always safest and best to write privately in advance of the letter of presentation, giving the person to whom the letter is addressed some idea of the social position, tastes, etc., of the bearer of the note or card.

My Dear Mrs. Black—It gives me the greatest pleasure to present to you Miss R. (Mrs. R. or Mr. R.). She has been a friend of mine for a number of years, and whatever you can do for her during her stay in —— I will consider a favor conferred upon me personally.

Then may follow a few remarks on subjects of common interest.

If one does not wish to write a note the words "Introducing Miss R." may be written across the top of one's visiting card.

Little Points of Etiquette.

It is courteous to shake hands with a guest in your own house, and many hostesses repeat the handshaking when he leaves.

It is only necessary to bow an acknowledgement of an introduction, though shaking hands is cordial and not considered old fashioned, as formerly.

A girl or young woman should rise when an older woman enters the room and remain standing until she is seated. It is customary to rise to receive a guest, whether it be man or woman.

DO NOT NAG GROWING BOYS.

Psychologist Declares Lads Should Work Out Own Problems.

"Let the growing boy work out his own salvation," was the appeal made by Dr. Arthur Holmes, professor of psychology at the University of Pennsylvania, when he recently addressed a large mothers' meeting.

Loving their children as they do and being earnest in the endeavor to help them, it was hard for many in Dr. Holmes' audience not to feel that he was right in the assertion that children are nagged too much and that boys especially should be allowed to develop naturally along their own lines.

"Mothers often forget," said he, "that, while their own way is to arrive at conclusions by intuition, boys are more logical and feel imperatively a need to work out things for themselves.

"Until he is nine or ten perhaps you may tell a lad not to do this thing or that, but from then on he will demand the reason why, and just here you will be shocked to discover that his ideas of right and wrong do not coincide with yours. Only the wise and unselfish mother will realize that there comes a time when she must withdraw from the growing boy and let him grow forth into the man's world, where she will only misunderstand should she follow.

"We older folks live in the past and worship the truths consecrated by age, but a boy naturally lives in the future. The very fact that a law, whether physical or ethical, is old is just why he wants to test its strength.

"You find it first when the boy chafes at parental authority and scoffs at family traditions, but if you are wise you will let him alone. He is manufacturing manhood. It is only the lad who questions and wonders and insists upon settling things for himself that amounts to anything worth while.

"Above all things, be careful that you do not condemn him for deeds whose motives were right and pure. His ideas may be different from yours, but if he does a thing and thinks it right then it is right, no matter whether any one else condemns or approves."

FOR THE HOUSEWIFE.

Uncle Sam Sends Books Free on Cookery Matters.

The foods used to give variety to the diet in the home vary with time, place and circumstances, but the staple foods the country over are cereal grains and their products, meat, dairy products, eggs and the more usual vegetables and fruits.

According to the results of a large number of carefully conducted studies in American homes, it appears that meat and poultry supply 16 per cent of the total food material, 30 per cent of the protein and 59 per cent of the fat in the average American dietary; dairy products, 18 per cent of the total food, 10 per cent of the total protein, 36 per cent of the total fat and 4 per cent of the total carbohydrates; cereals and their products, 31 per cent of the total food material, 43 per cent of the total protein, 9 per cent of the total fat, 62 per cent of the total carbohydrates; vegetables and fruits, 25 per cent of the total food, 9 per cent of the total protein, 2 per cent of the total fat and 16 per cent of the total carbohydrates.

These figures indicate clearly the relation which the principal agricultural products must necessarily bear to home problems. It is evident that utilization of these staple foods to the best advantage is of great importance to every housekeeper.

Bread, meat and vegetables form a large part of the food of the nation, and their purchase, care and preparation for the table are the themes of farmers' bulletin 256 ("Preparation of Vegetables For the Table"), 375 ("Care of Food In the Home"), 389 ("Bread and Breadmaking") and 391 ("Economical Use of Meat In the Home"). These publications may be had free by sending to the United States department of agriculture, Washington.

These bulletins are not "cookery books," although a large number of recipes for cooking vegetables and meats and mixing and baking bread are found between their covers.

Good Cake Making.

There are some general rules for cakemaking that must be observed:

First.—The ingredients must be of the best, for the best are the most economical.

Second.—Never allow butter to get too soft or oily before creaming it with the sugar.

Third.—Always have an earthen or enameled dish to mix and work the materials for cake. Tin, if not new, is apt to discolor the materials. Remember that eggs will tarnish even silver. Always use a clean wooden spoon.

Fourth.—As a rule, in mixing cake first beat the sugar and butter together to a cream, then add the yolks of the eggs. If spices are used, these go in with the yolks of the eggs; then comes milk and last the thoroughly beaten whites of the eggs and flavoring. If fruit is a portion, this is put in with the flour.

Fifth.—For small cakes the oven should be pretty hot; for larger cakes only moderately so. If a broom straw pushed through the thick part of the cake comes out clean and free from dough, the cake is done; also if the cake has left the sides of the plan and does not make the slightest hissing.

Sixth.—Some cooks take cake immediately from the pans and do not cover; others leave in the pans fifteen minutes and then cover. Experiment and experience must make the decision in each household.

A dog which upset a beehive at Ashburnham, Essex, was attacked by bees and stung to death.

Physicians Recommend Castoria

CASTORIA has met with pronounced favor on the part of physicians, pharmaceutical societies and medical authorities. It is used by physicians with results most gratifying. The extended use of Castoria is unquestionably the result of three facts: First—The indisputable evidence that it is harmless: Second—That it not only allays stomach pains and quiets the nerves, but assimilates the food: Third—It is an agreeable and perfect substitute for Castor Oil. It is absolutely safe. It does not contain any Opium, Morphine, or other narcotic and does not stupefy. It is unlike Soothing Syrups, Bateman's Drops, Godfrey's Cordial, etc. This is a good deal for a Medical Journal to say. Our duty, however, is to expose danger and record the means of advancing health. The day for poisoning innocent children through greed or ignorance ought to end. To our knowledge, Castoria is a remedy which produces composure and health, by regulating the system—not by stupefying it—and our readers are entitled to the information.—Hall's Journal of Health.

EXACT COPY OF WRAPPER.

Letters from Prominent Physicians addressed to Chas. H. Fletcher.

Dr. B. Halstead Scott, of Chicago, Ills., says: "I have prescribed your Castoria often for infants during my practice, and find it very satisfactory."

Dr. William Belmont, of Cleveland, Ohio, says: "Your Castoria stands first in its class. In my thirty years of practice I can say I never have found anything that so filled the place."

Dr. J. H. Taft, of Brooklyn, N. Y., says: "I have used your Castoria and found it an excellent remedy in my household and private practice for many years. The formula is excellent."

Dr. R. J. Hamlen, of Detroit, Mich., says: "I prescribe your Castoria extensively, as I have never found anything to equal it for children's troubles. I am aware that there are imitations in the field, but I always see that my patients get Fletcher's."

Dr Wm. J. McCrann, of Omaha, Neb., says: "As the father of thirteen children I certainly know something about your great medicine, and aside from my own family experience I have in my years of practice found Castoria a popular and efficient remedy in almost every home."

Dr. J. R. Clausen, of Philadelphia, Pa., says: "The name that your Castoria has made for itself in the tens of thousands of homes blessed by the presence of children, scarcely needs to be supplemented by the endorsement of the medical profession, but I, for one, most heartily endorse it and believe it an excellent remedy."

Dr. R. M. Ward, of Kansas City, Mo., says: "Physicians generally do not prescribe proprietary preparations, but in the case of Castoria my experience, like that of many other physicians, has taught me to make an exception. I prescribe your Castoria in my practice because I have found it to be a thoroughly reliable remedy for children's complaints. Any physician who has raised a family, as I have, will join me in heartiest recommendation of Castoria."

IN CASE OF INVASION.

What Britain Must Do to Protect Her Shores.

Not long ago, when British naval manoeuvres were in progress, one of our admirals was instructed to consider that he was in command of a squadron which was convoying transports containing 70,000 soldiers. He was also directed to land those troops, if he could, at a certain Scottish port. The admiral's area of operations was the North Sea. Now the North Sea is notorious for bad and uncertain weather, and is particularly susceptible to fogs. It happened that the admiral had fog nearly all the way across that famous stretch of water, and the result was that in theory he managed to reach his port and land his men, that is to say, if he had been in reality an enemy, he could have invaded Scotland.

His performance negatives the assertion which has been so often made that invasion of Great Britain is impossible. Nothing is impossible in war, when the unexpected so often happens, and on several occasions these imaginary descents on our own shores have been carried out with great success.

If in the next naval war the fight for sea supremacy takes place on the North Sea, as most authorities believe it will, no Englishman can escape from the depressing feeling that on any morning he may awake to learn that the country has been raided by a foreign horde, and that his own life and property are in peril, and that his fellow countrymen have been plunged [illegible] can know. [illegible] recent years the possibility of invasion has been recognized, and, as I have already pointed out, the British fleet has been completely reorganized and redistributed with a view to meet such attempts to land on our shores. So heavy will be the strain and responsibility on the heads of our fleets in such times that it is scarcely possible for an ordinary person to realize the immensity of the burden.

When the conflict does come it will be such as the world has never known on the waters, because there have never been such powerful fighting machines afloat.

Let us assume that hostilities suddenly break out between ourselves and a powerful European nation, one possessing a fleet almost equal in strength to our own, or, at least, equal to any fleet that we can put against it without weakening our naval power in other parts of the world. We know that everything depends on our smashing the enemy at sea, and making it impossible to cover a landing force. Once he gets a footing he has achieved his main purpose; for while we are desperately striving to destroy him he will claim our attention elsewhere in the world.

War has been declared, and the Dreadnoughts and super-Dreadnoughts of both powers meet and fight for mastery. The whole forces of both nations it seems, have been assembled for the combat, and when the rival fleets encounter each other there ensues a contest of unparalleled ferocity.

The huge steel monsters fire at each other from almost incredible distances. Here a lucky shot from a 12-inch gun creates such havoc that one of the opposing ships is put out of action and promptly starts away to try and seek salvation in flight. After her, however, goes a powerful modern British cruiser, a ship as formidable almost as the disabled battleship. She pursues her crippled antagonist, hanging on with ease and pounding her with her big guns. There is no help for it—the wounded leviathan must either surrender or be destroyed, and the captain, having done his duty, determines to lose no more lives and so he strikes his flag.—London Scraps.

FUNERAL OF THE LATE DR. GRAY HELD TO-DAY

The funeral of the late Dr. Gray was held this afternoon from the late residence, Sherbrooke street, to Gardner's cemetery, Millbrook, and a large representation of citizens and the medical profession attended. Rev. George Henderson, pastor of the Charlotte street Methodist church, officiated.

The late Dr. Gray was born in the township of Manvers, and had reached his 63rd year. Educated at Victoria College, Cobourg, he afterwards graduated in medicine in Toronto and practiced at Blackstock for some years. Removing to Bailieboro the deceased resided there for seventeen years, and then coming to this city, he practiced his profession for fourteen years.

Surviving him are his wife, who who was before her marriage Miss Elizabeth Kennedy, of Millbrook; one son, Kennedy, of Toronto; three brothers, Messrs. William, of Michigan; Samuel, of British Columbia and James, of Manvers township. The sisters are Mrs. (Rev.) Reynolds, of Cornwall, Ont.; Mrs. Robert Taylor, of Redvers, Sask., and Mrs Diamond, of Grand View, Man.

GORHAM IN GOOD HEALTH

A report is in circulation to the effect that James Gorham, who is awaiting trial in the county jail for the murder of his mother, is being affected in health as a result of the confinement, but the Review made inquiry to-day from an authoritive source and the report was contradicted.

According to the Ipswich medical officer of health there is not a perfect set of teeth among the school children of the district.

GOT OUT VERY QUICKLY

When the fire brigade turned out this afternoon it was not to extinguish a fire. The delegates of the Park street Baptist church convention were anxious to witness the celerity and speed of our brigade and Rev. J. R. Webb rang in an alarm from box 33. Fire Chief Howard was apprised of the nature of the call and the visitors were delighted with the result of the experiment, and were very complimentary in their remarks about the smartness of the Peterborough fire brigade.

THE SCAFFOLD IS COMPLETED FOR HANGING

Of Robert Henderson on June 23rd--Is in Inner Goal Yard--Ex-prisoner States Condemned Youth Retains His Good Spirits--Is a Ready Writer of Parodies--Name of Executioner Withheld.

The scaffold on which Robert Henderson is to meet his death, has been practically completed. A gang of four men has been working on the scaffold for some days past under the supervision of the official executioner. In spite of several inquiries at the sheriff's office, the name of the hangman could not be found out and for the reason the Review presumes, that he wants his identity concealed.

From a reliable source it is learned however, that the executioner is a man of middle size about fifty years of age apparently and speakes with an English accent.

The scaffold is in the inner jail yard on the north side and about two feet of it may be seen above the jail wall. A portion of the rope was visible yesterday, but it will be impossible for the public to see any part of the execution as the boarding at the top will be arranged so as to prevent this.

The executioner has left the city and will officiate at the hanging of Walter Ross at North Bay on the 21st, arriving here from there for Henderson's exection on the 23rd.

A local young man who has been a prisoner in the jail until recently, on a minor charge, states that Henderson is just as indifferent in his attitude as reports would indicate. He shaved the condemned man on a couple of times and the latter remarked that his barber might just as well cut his throat as let somebody else hang him.

The young man says that Henderson is a clever parodist and readily composes parodies on "Old Grey Bonnet" and other popular songs.

CHIEF HOWARD SAYS HE THINKS MEN JUST WANTED EXCUSE

And That Was Why They Quit Fire Department — Wages Not Tempting to Good Men — Speaks Highly of His Deputy Chief.

When Chief Howard was seen by the Review this morning regarding the seven men quitting the fire department the chief in commenting on the Review's interview with ex-Lieutenant Denno and ex-Fireman Dundas, stated that he was of the opinion that men only wanted an excuse to quit.

The chief stated that the wages paid firemen were very small and noticed that while he has had several good firemen employed from time to time, that it was difficult to retain men in the service when double the amount was to be earned in various other lines of work, on a nine hour a day schedule.

Chief Howard repudiated the statement that Assistant Chief Grange was unbearable or domineering. He said he was a very reliable, straightforward, industrious man, faithful to duty, always on time, courteous to visitors and a strict, but reasonable disciplinarian. The chief said that his assistant was a valuable man to the city and had become very efficient in his work.

The chief stated that a couple of Mr. Grange's former employers were after him the other day to re-engage him and he thought this was good evidence of his ability and trustworthiness.

"I wish there was a few more like him in the department," he concluded.

JUDGMENT AGAINST BANK OF ONTARIO IN SUPREME COURT

Bank is Ordered to Pay $1,500.00 and Costs to the McAllister Milling Company — $21,000 Rent Involved by This Judgment.

A Supreme Court judgment of local interest was given yesterday at Ottawa when the Ontario Bank was ordered to pay $1,500 and costs to the McAllister Milling Co., their appeal from the order of the Court of Appeal of Ontario being dismissed.

It will be remembered that this case was tried three years ago when judgment was given in favor of the McAllisters against the Bank. The bank then appealed to the Divisional Court, which gave judgment in favor of the bank, thereupon the McAllister Milling Co. appealed to the Court of Appeal for the Province of Ontario, which reversed the decision of the Divisional Court and restored the judgment of the trial judge in favor of the Milling Company. It was from this last judgment that the Ontario Bank appealed to the Supreme Court of Canada, which gave judgment confirming the judgment of the trial judge. This action is a test action and $21,000 rent is involved by this judgment.

Hon. A. B. Morine and F. R. McKelcan appeared before the Supreme Court for the Ontario Bank and Daniel O'Connell and Wallace Nesbitt, K.C., appeared for the McAllister Milling Company.

DON CUPID STILL SHOOTS

STENTON—ELLSWORTH.

A quiet, but pretty June wedding was solemnized on June 15 at the Cambridge street Methodist church parsonage, by Rev. J. P. Wilson, B. A., when Miss Kathleen Ellsworth, of Lindsay, was united in marriage to Mr. Herbert L. Stenton, of [illegible]ough. Miss Eva Stenton, sister of the groom, acted as bridesmaid, and Newman Wendt [illegible] the groom.—Lindsay Warder.

LETHEM—ECKFORD.

A pretty wedding took place in St. Andrew's Presbyterian church, Southampton, Ont., on Wednesday morning, when Miss Helen Cameron Eckford, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Eckford, was united in marriage to Mr. Edward Lethem, Peterborough, son of Mr. Edward Lethem, London, England, the Rev. J. R. Brown performing the ceremony. The bride was given away by her father, and looked very pretty in a cream serge costume, with hat to match, and carried a bouquet of cream roses, and wore a lovely necklace of amethysts and moonstones, the gift of the bridegroom. The church was prettily decorated, and the front part was occupied by the immediate friends, the body of the church being filled with the many friends of the bride. The ushers were Dr. John Eckford, Mexico, brother of the bride, and Mr. James Cameron, Walkerton, cousin of the bride. After the honeymoon the young couple will reside in Peterborough.—Mail and Empire.

FRANCIS—CAMERON.

An exceedingly pretty house wedding took place yesterday afternoon at 1 o'clock at Terrace Court, the home of Mr. and Mrs. James Meek, when their niece, Miss Mary Irene Cameron, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Duncan Cameron, of Portersville, Cal., became the bride of Mr. John Milton Francis, of Fort William, son of Mr. John Francis, of London, Ont. The bride was given away by her uncle, Mr. J. T. Emmerson, and was becomingly attired in a handsome travelling suit of bronze green cloth with hat of tuscan straw, trimmed [illegible] and roses and carried a shower bouquet of roses and lillies of the valley. Her sister, Miss Violet Cameron, was bridesmaid, and looked very pretty in a princess gown of buttercup satin and carried cream roses. The groom was supported by Mr. Milton Johnson, of Fort William. Rev. H. G. King, of Fort William, performed the ceremony, and Mrs. A. C. Moffatt, cousin of the bride, played the wedding march. The floral decorations used in the home were white roses, pink and white sweet peas and carnations interspersed with potted plants, which lent a most bride-like appearance to the entire surroundings. The guests included only immediate friends and relatives. After the ceremony a buffet luncheon was served, and Mr. and Mrs. Francis left on the Hamonic for a month's visit to Peterborough, Toronto, London and Muskoka district. On their return they will reside on Marks street, Fort William. The groom's gift to the bride was a beautiful diamond and ruby ring. To the bridesmaid handsome pearl bar brooch. To Mr. Moffatt a pretty gold hat pin.

CARELESSNESS OF AUTO DRIVERS

Is the Cause of a General Complaint in This City

Some person is going to be seriously injured, if not fatally, as a result of the careless handling of automobiles in this city. Many are the complaints made by pedestrians and those driving about the city in vehicles.

Some of the drivers of these machines should exercise a little common sense. The highways of the city were not built alone for automobiles, despite the impression to the contrary made by those in charge of the cars.

Last night the outfit of a local expressman had a close shave from being damaged, owing to the smartness of the youthful occupants of an automobile. Complaints have been directed against this machine frequently.

COST IS QUADRUPLED SAYS MR. R. L. BORDEN

Speaking to Big Gathering at Aylmer Conservative Chieftain Has Nothing to Say Against the Value of the Road But Cost Has Been Enormous.

Aylmer, June 18.—East Elgin furnished the largest meet so far in the present tour through Ontario by R. L. Borden. The crowd which yesterday thronged around the platform in the town park numbered fully three thousand. Besides an elaborate display of flags and bunting, political mottoes were hung at different places in the park, such as "Honest administration of public affairs," and "Unswerving loyalty to the British Crown." A band was in attendance and the schools were closed.

Mr. Borden's speech yesterday was mainly centered upon the cost of the Transcontinental Railway, "the discrepancy between Sir Wilfrid Laurier's original estimate of $13,000,000, and an ultimate expenditure of $250,000,000, together with a review of the various geological phenomena whereby the contractors found a few thousand cubic yards of gravel increase in a short time to millions of cubic yards of loose and hard rock."

He was not disposed to deny the advantages of the Transcontinental Railway, but the money involved, in view of the estimate, coupled with obvious mismanagement and incompetence, were circumstances for which the Laurier Government should be called upon to answer."

"The road will cost the country at least four times the amount estimated by the Government when the contract was forced through Parliament. No reasonable explanation, nor indeed any explanation has been given of this enormous increase," declared Mr. Borden, who, after a reference to the Lumsden enquiry of the last session, said: "Those charges and other equally important matters have up to the present remained absolutely uninvestigated to the infinite discredit of the Government and of the commission itself."

J. F. Martyn, president of East Elgin Conservative Association, was chairman, and on the platform were Hon. R. A. Pyne, Minister of Education; T. W. Crothers, M.P.P.; David Marshall, M.P.P.; F McDiarmid, M.P.P.; C. A. Brower, M.P.P., and T McCall

Dr. Pyne congratulated East Elgin on the demonstration. To young men he said they should think well before they made a choice of a party. The Conservative party was the party of progress. The promises combined in the confederation contract had been fulfilled by the Conservative party.

The Minister of Education went over a number of reforms effected by the Whitney Government. His reference to the completion of the Hydro-Electric cheap power scheme was received with applause.

When the picnic in Aylmer Park was concluded, R. L. Borden, Judge Doherty and party were taken in tow by Tom Crothers, M. P., and David Marshall, M.P., and driven in automobiles to St. Thomas. Ten cars were required to carry the contingent. The rural telephone spread the news along the Talbot road and here and there salutes were exchanged with [illegible] admirers.

On arriving in St. Thomas, the party were driven to the residence of Mr. Crothers, where a garden party had been arranged. The lawn was beautifully decorated, and as Mr. Borden approached, the band started up, "See the Conquering Hero Comes."

The unexpected arrival of J. A. Macdonald, editor of The Toronto Globe, caused the remark to be passed with a laugh that "the lion and the lamb lie down together."

"Good luck to you, Mr. Borden," said the editor, as he grasped his hand.

The adjoining home of Dr. Kennedy was also thrown open to accommodate the crowd of several hundred.

CHURCHES TOO INTERFERING SAYS RURAL DEAN CAYLEY

Toronto, June 18.—After cramming into the day's proceedings half a dozen warm debates on matters of varying importance the Synod of the Diocese of Toronto concluded its business last evening and prorogued. The debate on St. Alban's Cathedral apparently stirred up the delegates, for yesterday's session was lively from start to finish. Such diversified subjects as the question of paying pensions to the young widows of elderly clergymen, tobogganning in High Park on winter Sundays, and the prohibition of club licenses occupied the attention of the Synod. With the first of these three the delegates forgot that they were members of a solemn, deliberative body, and made merry, but the Sunday tobogganning and club licenses proved knotty matters, and the argument at one time got so warm that the bishop was called upon to interfere.

Mr. H. T. Beck began the debate upon the club license matter when he objected to a clause in the report of the Temperance and Moral Reform Committee asking the Synod to again declare opposition to the granting of liquor licenses to clubs.

The Synod, he declared, had passed such a resolution last year, and by harping upon the matter the church would lose the moral and financial support of a great many leading men who were members of clubs.

"Do you mean to say," called out a delegate, "that these influential men would resign from the clubs if there were no liquor sold?"

Mr. Beck insisted that there was no reason why the Synod should repeat its former resolution, and the bishop was just starting to rule to that effect when his voice was drowned in an uproar of "No, no."

Rural Dean Cayley's mild description of the clause was "humbug." "The Christian Church," he said, "exists to preach the Gospel. We do not find in any word of our Lord's teaching the doctrine of prohibition. We are going mad on this subject of prohibition, not only in one but in many ways." The rural dean quoted a remark made to him that this kind of action by churchmen was 'making the church stink in the nostrils of some of the most splendid men in the country.'"

"We haven't the right," he added, "to alienate the respect and support of men who do not happen to think it wise for men to be more prohibitory than God."

Archdeacon Ingles, chairman of the Temperance and Moral Reform Committee, explained that he was not a prohibitionist but that he was determined that the report should be accepted. Liquor licenses in clubs were dangerous to young men and these dangers should be reduced as far as possible. "I am not going to yield from that one iota," he declared amid applause. Mr. Beck moved and Rev. F. G. Plummer seconded, that the objectionable words be struck out, but by a vote of 60 to 36 the Synod went on record against club licenses.

SENSATION AT PORT ARTHUR

Port Arthur, Ont., June 18.—A first-class sensation was sprung in elevator circles at the head of the lakes to-day when it became known that Elevator Commissioner, Castle has sealed up the bins of several of the terminal elevators here, and that the result of a full investigation will probably be the proving of a gigantic system of manipulation of grades. The exact facts are not known yet, but it is rumored that operations have netted millions to those in the ring. What points strongly to seriousness in the affair is that Castle is taking personal action and has not left any detail to under officials.

Prominent grain men here believe that the Dominion Government will shortly step in and take over all the terminal elevators.

IMMIGRATION STATISTICS

Ottawa, June 18.—Immigration to Canada in the last ten years totals 1,445,288, according to statistics in a handbook being issued by the Department of Immigration.

The fiscal year recently closed eclipsed all others in the volume of immigration, the arrivals numbering 208,794. Since 1902, when the deportation regulations became effective, 3,883 people have been deported, the greatest number being [illegible] when the total was 1,748. Last year it was 734. Of those deported Englishmen predominated, being upwards of 2,400.

The average percentage on which bonuses are paid is about 16.47 British; 5.60 Americans and 10.90 continental.

NOT HER TIME YET

New York, June 18.—Theodora Elwell, grand niece of one of Brooklyn's great philanthropists, James E. Elwell, daughter of J. D. Elwell, a member of a stock exchange firm, and a graduate of Radcliffe College at Cambridge, hanged herself in an abandoned gymnasium in Brooklyn yesterday. She was dressed only in her night gown. She had suffered from melancholia.

Jumping in front of a subway express train at the 72nd street station, Miss Edith Hardcastle, 24 years old, living at the Hotel Regent, attempted suicide. Although two cars of the train passed over her as she lay between the rails, she was uninjured.

JUMPED INTO RIVER AT NIAGARA FALLS

Niagara Falls, Ont., June 18.—An unidentified man, between 35 and 40 years of age, yesterday morning jumped into the river from Green Island bridge and was carried over the falls. Arthur Wells, Leeds, England, a tourist, saw the suicide jump into the water, and describes him as being above medium height, of light complexion and garbed in light-colored clothes. The suicide wore a thin straw colored moustache and had on a black derby. Wells thought that the man's appearance indicated that he had been on a protracted spree.

The funeral of the twelve Hungarian fire victims was held yesterday morning. About five hundred people attended. The coffins were taken to the cemetery on four draped drays.

Another international wedding that attracted the attention of society throughout the world was that of the marriage of Miss Margarette A. Armstrong Drexel and Viscount Maidstone, elder son of the Earl of Winchilsea and Nottingham, which was solemnized at St. Margaret's, Westminster, recently. The Bishop of London was the chief officiating clergyman. He was assisted by Canon Henson, Canon of Westminster Abbey and rector of St. Margaret's. The approaches and the interior of the church were lavishly decorated with white Madonna lillies and marguerites. Huge baskets of these flowers were mounted on the top of staves at the end of each pew, interspersed with palms, while there was the same floral profusion in the chancel and the choir.

Among the attendants were Miss Mildred Carter, Lady Violet Manners and Miss Edith Wayne.

LATE TICKS FROM WIRES

David Pouncey, wanted on a burglary charge by the Rochester, N.Y., police, was arrested at Kinmount, Ont., while with his girl.

Bull's sawmil at Skibbereen, Haldimand Township, 12 miles from Cobourg, was burned with two traction engines and other machinery. There is no insurance.

On the second story balcony of the house in Seymour, Conn., where they had lived as husband and wife, Theodore Withgyk shot and killed Mary Kusko, threw her body to the street, and then going into the house ended his own life.

Walking in his sleep, P. T. Brudder, a retired New York business man, 70 years of age, fell through an open window in his sixth floor apartment and was instantly killed. Brudder had been a somnambulist since childhood.

The teachers of the Iroquois High School, like Oliver Twist, have asked for more money, and the board will advertise for an entire new staff. They may also try to get on with four instead of five teachers for the balance of the year.

SUCCESS TO THE ROYAL

To-night will be the last chance for patrons of the Royal to see the big vaudeville show which has been on for the last three days, as the engagement is finished to-night. Anyone not having seen the Perry-Edwards Musical Comedy Company's performance, should not fail to do so to-night.

On Monday next the Royal will continue putting on big vaudeville attractions with its motion picture

Starting with Monday there will be three big vaudeville acts, two doubles and a single act at each performance, and the admission will be only five cents to everyone to all parts of the house at any time, afternoon or evening. Do not miss the Royal next week for big amusement attractions.

WILL LEASE THE HUDSON BAY R'Y.

Ottawa, June 18.—While the Dominion Government will build the Hudson Bay Railway it is more than probable that it will be leased to one of the existing railway companies. Owing to the climatic conditions the road cannot be operated for many months of the year, and the rolling stock in that period would be idle if the line were run by the Government

SUGAR TRUST INVESTIGATOR GETS HUNDRED THOUSAND

The Young Weigher on the New York Docks Who Discovered the System of False Scales Used by Combine Gets Fortune From U.S.

Washington, June 18.—Rich. Parr, the customs department deputy at New York, who assisted the Government in recovering over $2,000,000 in the sugar underweighing frauds, is to receive a reward of $100,000.

This is in addition to the promotion in the department given some time ago, at a salary increased from $3,000 to $3,500 a year.

Parr, a native of Albany, N.Y., was a sampler of sugar on the piers about New York in 1904 at a salary of $1,000 a year. A comfortable salary for a young man, but Parr had to support his mother and his sister also.

While serving in this capacity he discovered that the Government was being cheated by the sugar trust by a system of false weights. Parr happened to know Wm. Loeb, jr., who at that time was secretary to President Roosevelt. Parr went to Washington and told Loeb of his discovery. Loeb carried the matter to Roosevelt, and this resulted in Parr's appointment as special agent of the Treasury Department.

Roosevelt sent the young man out to penetrate [illegible] the Havemeyer Trust. Largely as a result of his work the Government now knows that the sugar trust has stolen some $30,000,000. The trust restored $2,000,000 of stolen money to the Government Treasury. Henry O. Havemeyer died of fear of prosecution, several subordinate officers are now under indictment, and jail and disgrace has cast black shadows over half a dozen rich and influential heads of the trust.

It was Parr who discovered that the trust's checkers and weighers on the Brooklyn docks used a false weight system, and by it cheated the Government out of $1.80 per ton raw sugar duty, and some idea of the enormity of the fraud may be had from the fact that during six years the trust passed more than 75,000,000 pounds of sugar over the docks on which not a cent of duty was paid.

It came to the knowledge of the heads of the trust that Parr had this information, and immediately an attempt was made to "reach him." In a roundabout way Parr was informed that if he would protect the trust he could have $100,000 in cash and the trust would pay his expenses on a trip around the world. He indignantly put the attempt at bribery behind him and informed Roosevelt of the occurrence. He says he got instructions to continue his efforts with increased zeal, and he did. At the time the glistening bribe was offered Parr was receiving from the Government a salary of only $3,000 per year.

Later he was offered a second bribe of $25,000 cash if he would give up a little steel spring that Parr had taken from one of the trust's scales, the function of which was to prevent the scales from weighing the full measure of sugar. He replied by having the fellow who offered the bribe arrested, but the evidence was incomplete and this trust's tool got through the law's net.

Later Parr heard of threats against his life. He laughed at these. The daring of the trust is shown by the fact that a burglar was sent to Parr's office in the customs house and succeeded in making away with some of the evidence the young agent had left in his desk.

Parr lives with his family at 414 W. 114th street, New York City.

TORONTO HAS ITS FIRST BOATING DISASTER OF SEASON

Party of Four in a Launch Get in Way of Ferry on Toronto Bay and Mrs. Mabel Mairick and Her Sister Perish, While Reginald Cooper and Frank Logan Are Rescued.

Toronto, June 18.—Two young women drowned, their escorts rescued, is the result of the first fatality of the season in Toronto harbor.

The tragedy came as a terrible climax to a pleasant evening spent by the four young persons in the 18-foot motor launch "Cecilia," which, returning to the city about 10.45 p.m., came into collision with the ferry John Hanlan. Captain Joyce of the ferry declares that the launch had safely crossed the steamer's bow and then, suddenly, backed up right in front of it.

A few minutes later Reginald Cooper and Frank Logan were taken from the water, when it was learned that their companions, Mrs. Mabel Melrick and her sister, Miss Emma Carlaw, had perished.

Mrs. Melrick was the widow of James Melrick, nephew of James E., proprietor of the Alexandra House, at the corner of Queen and Elizabeth streets. Since last September, when her husband, who was associated in the business, died, she had continued to reside at the hotel. She was about 25 years of age. Miss Carlaw was about two years her junior. Her home is at Morning's Mills, where her father is a well-known miller, but for the past year she had been stopping at the hotel. There is a married sister living in the city.

Cooper, on reaching the city, was whisked away to his boarding house at 1774 Dundas street in an automobile for a change of clothing. He then hurried on a bicycle to the Alexandra House, to import the sad news of the drowning, but found that it had preceded him. Cooper was unaware that his male companion, Frank Logan, had been saved until so informed by a little group, and ejaculated: "Thank God for that."

He appeared to be in a partially dazed condition, and had little to say regarding the accident.

"Were you carrying a light?" he was asked.

"Yes, a big one," he said, adding that it seemed about twenty minutes before he was picked up by the ferry-boat, then left on his wheel.

Mr. Melrick said he was not aware that the two young women had gone on a boating trip until word of the tragedy came to him. He believed it was the first trip in a launch they had taken this summer.

Cooper and Logan are employed at the Barthelmes Piano Action Works on Niagara street. Cooper has owned the launch for two months, and according to friends was an expert operator, having operated a launch last summer at least. Cooper is 23 years of age and Logan about the same. They refused to be interviewed regarding the disaster.

TELEGRAPHERS ASK INCREASE

Montreal, June 18.—A large deputation of operators in the employ of the C.P.R. telegraph department, waited on D. McNicholl at the C.P.R. headquarters yesterday in regard to a dispute between the company and the men over wages and other matters.

The delegates asked for increases amounting to about 17 per cent. That offered by the company represented from 8 to 10 per cent., and made no discrimination for length of service. The company further maintained that even now it is paying five per cent. more than any other telegraph organization in the Dominion and a rate equal to that in the United States.

A Brother's Heroism.

Chatham, June 18.—The residence of Mr. Bell of Tupperville was burned to the ground Thursday night, and Bell's two sons, who were sleeping in the house at the time, had a narrow escape from death.

The elder boy awoke to find the place in flames. He rushed to the room where his brother was sleeping and got him out safely, although he may lose his own eyesight.

SHOCK UPSETS PRINTER

Montreal, June 18.—With a terrible cry of "Keep back the flames, boys," John O'Callaghan, 70 years old, printer in The Herald, fell unconscious over his case in the paper's temporary office yesterday morning.

O'Callaghan had a narrow escape from death in Monday's holocaust, and the scene so preyed on his mind that he temporarily lost his reason. He kept shouting to those about him to run from the fire.

He visited the morgue yesterday and ever since viewing the blackened corpses had complained of feeling ill. The doctor thinks he will recover after a rest.

REUNION OF THE Q.O. RIFLES

Toronto, June 18.—With a garden party this afternoon at the Exhibition grounds and a smoker to-night at the [illegible] the Queen's Own Rifles of Canada will commence the celebration of its semi-centennial. The celebration will last for a week and a number of important events are on the program, among them the production of historical pageants on the exhibition grounds. Already there are many in the city for the reunion, which is expected to be one of the most successful gatherings of the kind ever held in this city.

ELUDED GUARDS CUTS HIS THROAT

Alexandria, Ont., June 18.—Postmaster E. A. Newton of Fassifern cut his throat yesterday morning at two o'clock with a razor, and expired immediately.

Deceased was 37 years of age, married, and removed from Montreal to Fassifern about three years ago, where he purchased a store. He had been drinking heavily.

A couple of neighbors were spending Thursday night watching him. About two o'clock Newman got up and went to a bureau drawer evidently to get a cigar but actually to secure a razor. Showing it to the guards, he blew out the lamp, and before they could realize the situation, he had cut his throat.

GOVERNMENT WIRELESS READY

Ottawa, June 18.—The following Canadian Government wireless telegraph stations on the British Columbia coast are now in commission, and in a position to handle commercial business: Victoria, Point Gray (Vancouver), Cape Lazo Pachena, Estevan, Triangle Island, Ikeda Head, Queen Charlotte Island, Prince Rupert.

The following are the tolls: To and from ship, $1.20 first ten words and 12 cents each additional word, which is the maximum rate allowed by the Berlin convention. Rates for vessels on the Vancouver, Victoria, Seattle service 25 cents. For local business the rate is from 50 cents to 75 cents.

STRATHCONA AIDS WINNIPEG FAIR

Winnipeg, June 18.—The Winnipeg Industrial Exhibition Association yesterday received the largest individual money gift in its history from Lord Strathcona, though the amount has been withheld by the directors at the desire of the donor. It is understood, however, that the gift marks a unique record of its kind.

Only a few months ago Portage la Prairie Fair was remembered by Canada's high commissioner to the extend of $2,000.

Slashed Her Daughter's Suitor.

North Bay, June 18.—Not relishing the attentions showered by one Alfred Orsatti, aged 30, upon her daughter, Mrs. James Pelangie got on his trail with a knife. A letter from Orsatti urging the handsome thirteen-year-old lass to get some money and fly with him exhausted Mrs. Pelangie's patience. Orsatti is now in the hospital decidedly carved up, but with a good chance of recovery.

FARMER KILLED BY RUNAWAY

Shelburne, June 18—John Marshall, a well-to-do farmer, living about one mile north of Shelburne, lost his life as a result of a runaway yesterday.

He was working on the road unloading gravel, when an automobile approached, owned by Dr. Gowan of Hornings Mills. The horses became frightened and ran away.

Marshall, who was standing on the whiffletrees at the time, was thrown on the tongue of the wagon and dragged for some distance. He only lived a short time after the accident.

TWENTY-SIX HAVE BEEN IDENTIFIED

Montreal, June 18.—One by one the blackened remains of the victims of The Herald fire are being identified. Two more were recognized yesterday, making a total of 26. Two other bodies are still at the morgue, and four more are yet in the ruins.

The city authorities ceased last night the work of hunting for more victims, and The Herald took over the task this morning.

This morning a public funeral was held by the Typographical Union on behalf of 13 members.

Missionaries Not Trouble Makers.

Edinburgh, June 18.—William J. Bryan addressed the evening session of the World's Missionary Conference. He refuted many of the objections to missions and said that missionaries were much less apt to get nations into trouble than persons who went abroad for the purpose of making money.

Confined to His Home for Weeks.

"Heavy work, severe straining and evil habits in youth brought on Varicose Veins. When I worked hard the aching would become severe and I was often laid up for a week at a time. My family physician told me an operation was my only hope—but I dreaded it. I tried several specialists, but soon found out all they wanted was my money. I commenced to look upon all doctors as little better than rogues. One day my boss asked me why I was off work so much and I told him my condition. He advised me to consult Drs. Kennedy & Kennedy, as he had taken treatment from them himself and knew they were square and skillful. I wrote them and got THE NEW METHOD TREATMENT. My progress was somewhat slow and during the first month's treatment I was somewhat discouraged. However, I continued treatment for three months longer and was rewarded with a complete cure. I could only earn $12 a week in a machine shop before treatment, now I am earning $21 and never loose a day. I wish all sufferers knew of your valuable treatment.

THE THUNDER STORM

The thunder spoke last night, the rain came in torrents, and the public hurried to shelter and the birds ceased their music. But the storm stopped, and man came forth, and the birds once more commenced their singing.

There are thirteen thousand species of birds known. They make their homes everywhere, from the flamingo, who sits astride to hatch, to the burrowing owl who builds underground, the oriole who hangs her home aloft, or the little grebe, who builds a floating nest, hops on and paddles away. There are all kinds. Some cannot fly. Some can scarcely walk. They spend their days and hours in the air, some sing, others cannot. Some court company, others remain alone, solitary.

We know but few of these thirteen thousand feathered friends, but those we do know are almost without exception of some benefit to man.

We think that the flies and insects are bad, but were it not for these feathered hosts who come to us each year, our lives would be unbearable, and many a fine crop of field and tree would be utterly ruined.

They never sleep, their patrol is incessant. At night the owl, the whip-poor-will and night hawk are abroad, in the day the swallows clear the air, aided by the pewee, the phoebe and the kingbird. The yellow-shafted flicker, the red head, the blackbird, the sparrow and the robin take up the chase on tree and lawn.

There is no spot that is not examined for insects, no old tree that is not sounded for grubs, no old house that is not entered, no farmer's barn, no back yard, front yard, where the conditions for a birdly meal are not investigated.

A hawk might catch an odd chicken, yet in the examination of the stomach of many hawks but one gave evidence of a chicken dinner. All the rest had feasted on mice. The bird is our friend, and the farmer or sport from the town who shoots one simply says to ten thousand insects: "There, I've killed your enemy, live on."

The original bird seldom descended to earth, had teeth, and hooks on its wings, and clambered from tree to tree.

The are a couple of these specimens extant. One in the British Museum and the other in the museum in Berlin.

COLLEGIATE ECHOES

The 'Collegiate Echoes' is on the desk from press in the Review job room. The title tells the story of the magazine. It is at once attractive and original, and the editor-in-chief, Miss Edith M. Connor, has surrounded herself with six live wires as sub-editors, whose names are Margaret Anderson, Maysie Armstrong, Wilhell Blewett, Donald Denham, Ray Scott and H. Delahey. The business manager is Fred Brown, and associated with him on the business board are W. F. Gibson and Jack Harstone.

There is merit in 'Collegiate Echoes,' merit enough to have it stand on its pins without any clipping, which, while done, has, however, been done very judiciously. Some of the essays are little classics, and there are none indifferent. Verna Merril has what is called a second prize story in the composition contest. This effort is not a story, but a little prose poem, showing a splendid acquaintance with nature, and the rare ability to tell what is seen. Waverley Abbey is also a worthy offering, by Miss Edwina Palmer. Among the other contributors are noticed, Marmaduke Pearson, George Hogan, S. Parks, and Lillie Shearer.

The students at the Collegiate should preserve their 'Echoes' and let them resound down the Halls of Time, reminding them of their happy days at school.

RATS

The ladies who have the rat fad, and whose supply of (hair?) is a bundle of deception and luxuriousness, will be startled to know that they are raising the dead through their desire to look bewitching. The Chinamen, in their efforts to secure an honest penny have been digging up their dead brethren in the land of Confucius, and cutting the hair from the corpses, which, of course, cannot object. The custom is so widespread that the authorities of China have cut off the head of the offenders and left the hair on.

Leprosy and other eastern diseases [illegible] in the rats in their unpurified state.

CLARA MORRIS

It was not so long ago that James Cowan, who runs the Grand Opera House in Toronto for Ambrose Small received a letter from a girl up north enclosing a sum of money and asking Mr. Cowan to get her a position on the stage. The glare of the footlights had fascinated her.

Mr. Cowan sent the money back, and with it a note of warning. He had seen both sides of the game. There is an hypnotism by the stage to the unsophisticated, but it is a hard, hard life. For every one who achieves more than a washing off of grease paint and a sleeping and riding to the next town, and an engagement on a one-night stand circuit, there are a hundred ill-bred, ill-paid performers. The scramble is awful and the rewards few. And then the public are fickle, and the temptations out of the ordinary to all other walks of life. There are few home ties to the actor or actress, the next town, what kind of a reception, will the ghost walk on pay day, and next season what will it be? These are the thoughts of the mind. Once in a while a star shines out, but just once in a while; that's all. And besides, being fickle, the public soon forgets. Clara Morris, the once talked-of, praised, applauded, handsome Clara Morris, is dying, and her home is being sold over her head. The life of the average actor is an existence. They are paid to laugh and smile, but in many cases that is all there is to it. It is all on the face, the sorrow is hid by a smile.

THE RICH AND POOR

Advices from New York state that over five million dollars will be paid out during June alone for first and second cabin fares on steamships from New York to Europe. In all 17,500 persons have engaged first-class passage, and it will require fifty-eight steamers to carry them.

And they will sail the blue Mediterranean, and its cool breezes will kiss their brow, while the sweat shops will be working overtime, and prespiration will bead the brow of the working host in the land of the great Republic. They will climb the Alps and rest in delightful places, and thousands will, in the land that they have left, climb tenement stairs, to overheated rooms to troubled rest, to rest on heaty roof or fire escape.

Spoiled children with nurses will ride and drive and bathe in a distant land, where the scene is pleasant and the clime delightful. Famished children will look with wistful eyes in the store windows of the great cities, lonely for love, hungry for food and clothes that are not tattered.

Yes, the wheels will whirr this summer, the wheels of the automobiles out in God's good air in Europe, and wheels will whirr in the country of the screeching eagle, the wheels of the sewing machine as she endeavors to keep the hand of want from the home. The millionaires will flit when the sun gets busy, but the poor are ever toiling.

WANTED, MEN

In the want columns of this paper will be seen an advertisement for young men. The Canadian General Electric Company wants them. Here is a large concern looking for live ones. The opening is exceptional. In every large firm there are rare chances, and some of the heads of corporations have risen from the office of janitor, or sweeper, to the very top. The man who is at the head of the Canadian General Electric, and who sits in his office in Toronto, with a man outside watching lest his valuable time be interrupted, was once in a humble position in life, and through sheer force of character, ability, determination and undaunted will, won his way to the top.

IS MACKENZIE KING IN BOOK?

Mrs. Humphrey Ward's Hero Strikingly Like Labor Minister.

Mrs. Humphry Ward's novel of Canadian life, known in England as "The Canadian Born" and in Canada as "Lady Merton, Colonist, is attracting especial attention in Ottawa because the leading characters seem to be drawn from the personal traits and incidents in the career of Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, Minister of Labor. The probability of this is heightened by the fact that Mr. King met Mrs. Ward when some years ago he had a traveling fellowship from Harvard and was in England. When she visited Canada on a trip that inspired the story Mr. King gave a tea for the eminent writer in Ottawa.

The book is called "Lady Merton, Colonist," in Canada in compliance with the requirement of the Canadian copyright laws that books written in England bear a different title in Canada. It deals with a trip over the Canadian Pacific Railway of a titled Englishwoman of wealth, a widow, with her brother, a semi-invalid. They travel in a private car, and where the line is blocked she meets a young Canadian, George Anderson, in the employ of the Canadian Pacific Railway, who has all the physical and mental attributes that a hero should have in a new country and who eventually saves her brother's life.

The hero of the novel is about to run for Parliament, with assurances of success arising from successfully averting for the railway company a strike which would have caused much financial loss and industrial suffering. Mr. King got his foothold for a rapid rise in Canadian public life by settling a serious coal miners' strike in Lethbridge. He was then Deputy Minister of labor, but, of course, Mrs. Ward could not follow the simile that far, as a deputy minister's job is at a desk in Ottawa, and he could never have devoted his time, even in a novel, to conducting a private car party through the adventures to which several hundred pages are devoted.

An English suitor joins the party car at Winnipeg and is told off by Mrs. Ward as a foil for the young Canadian, with whom Lady Merton is beginning to fall in love. As the state of Mr. King's heart is not bared to the public it cannot be said what similarity exists in this part of the story.

The inevitable love test is provided when Mrs. Ward gives George Anderson a thoroughly disreputable father, who is supposed to be dead, but who turns up and robs a train just when the heart theme has reached a critical point. There is no similarity here, for Mr. King is handsomely provided as to a father, his being an eminent professor of law at Osgoode Hall.

The train robbery in which George Anderson's reprobate father is providentially killed shows the stuff Lady Merton is made of, for it serves only to draw her closer to the man she loves. She induces him to withdraw his resignation of a mission of enquiry to England on certain labor and immigration matters. This brings the character back to the Minister of Labor again, for he performed with eminent success special missions to London, India and China on immigration questions and the regulation of the opium trade.

Mrs. Ward's character is endowed with magnetism, agreeable manners, friendship with the Governor-General and an intense spirit of Canadian nationality. Mr. King has all these. George Anderson marries Lady Merton. Mr. King is still a bachelor.

Col. Rogers' Little Joke.

Lt.-Col. S. Maynard Rogers, of the 43rd Rifles, who in the last militia general orders was gazetted to the command of the 8th Infantry Brigade, was the hero of one of the best Canadian stories of the South African war, and what is somewhat to the point, this story is positively true. Lt.-Col. Rogers went to South Africa in command of the first Canadian contingent. During a brief period of inactivity in the campaign there was a very swell military banquet at Pretoria, at which Col. Rogers found himself seated among a number of officers of Imperial Yeomanry and some of the more select colonial corps. In the conversation at table it transpired that most of the officers at that particular spot, in civil life were professional men—physicians, lawyers, civil engineers, architects, etc. Naturally much of the conversation turned on professional topics and various opinions on all sorts of subjects were expressed. Lieut.-Col. Rogers, not being of a particularly silent nature of course had his say; but he carefully steered clear of professional topics and was consequently about the only one present who had not revealed his business. As a matter of fact, he is an undertaker, having succeeded to the extensive business founded by his father who, Canadians will remember, had charge of the funeral of Sir John A. Macdonald. In course of time some of the Canadian officer's newly-made friends became curious as to his sphere of usefulness in civil life and one of them asked him what profession he belonged to. With characteristic readiness, the gallant colonel replied:—"Oh! I follow the medical profession." No one saw the joke, but Col. Rogers admits having had to use considerable adroitness during the ensuing conversation to keep out of some technical discussions which arose among the doctors present.

Rubies Are of Good Quality.

Since last November a strong company has been at work on a property on the 15th and 16th concession of Ashby, in Renfrew county, and it is now said that they have a mine rich in ruby gems. Ruby corundum of the higher grades come for the most part from upper Burmah, and Harry McMaster, mining engineer, who examined the property on behalf of the syndicate, states in his report that the formation is identical with that which obtains in the ruby fields of Burmah.

The Piano That Anybody Can Play

Thousands of homes where music would add a delight and charm to home life are silent and uninteresting as far as music is concerned. Why? Because none of the family can play. But here is the means of having the music of the best masters and modern composers played accurately and artistically by any person at all. The is equipped with the most effective and most expensive mechanism. It is the simplest and easiest to operate of any on the market.

Beautiful to See, Beautiful to Hear.

The Nordheimer Player-Piano is an instrument of magnificent beauty. The piano part is identical with our high-grade models, and the player part is entirely enclosed within the case, leaving the instrument, when not in use, looking exactly like an ordinary piano. In operation, in modulation, and in expression, it gives the easiest and most perfect rendition. The tone of these instruments is not affected by the player attachment, but has all the sweetness of the Nordheimer Piano—the "Quality-Tone" Piano. IS THERE MUSIC IN YOUR HOME? If not, let us give you further particulars about the

By GASTON LEROUX

COPYRIGHT, 1908, BY BRENTANO'S

"Oh, nothing very important. A drop of blood," he replied, turning toward Daddy Jacques as he spoke. "While you were washing the laboratory and this vestibule was the vestibule window open?" he asked.

"No, monsieur, it was closed. But after I had done washing the floor I lit some charcoal for monsieur in the laboratory furnace, and as I lit it with old newspapers it smoked, so I opened both the windows in the laboratory and this one to make a current of air. Then I shut those in the laboratory and left this one open when I went out. When I returned to the pavilion this window had been closed and monsieur and mademoiselle were already at work in the laboratory."

"M. or Mlle. Stangerson had no doubt shut it?"

"No doubt."

"You did not ask them?"

"No."

After a close scrutiny of the little lavatory and of the staircase leading up to the attic Rouletabille—to whom we seemed no longer to exist—entered the laboratory. I followed him. I was, I confess, in a state of great excitement. Robert Darzac lost none of my friend's movements. As for me my eyes were drawn at once to the door of the yellow room. It was closed and, as I immediately saw, partially shattered and out of commission.

My friend, who went about his work methodically, silently studied the room in which we were. It was large and well lighted. Two big windows—almost bays—were protected by strong iron bars and looked out upon a wide extent of country.

The whole of one side of the laboratory was taken up with a large chimney, crucibles, ovens and such implements as are needed for chemical experiments; tables, loaded with vials, papers, reports, an electrical machine—an apparatus, as M. Darzac informed me, employed by Professor Stangerson to demonstrate the dissociation of matter under the action of solar light—and other scientific implements.

Along the walls were cabinets, plain or glass fronted, through which were visible microscopes, special photographic apparatus and a large quantity of crystals.

Rouletabille, who was ferreting in the chimney, put his fingers into one of the crucibles. Suddenly he drew himself up and held up a piece of half consumed paper in his hand. He stepped up to where we were talking by one of the windows.

"Keep that for us, M. Darzac," he said.

I bent over the piece of scorched paper which M. Darzac took from the hand of Rouletabille and read distinctly the only words that remained legible:

"Presbytery—lost nothing—charm, nor the gar—its brightness."

Twice since the morning these same meaningless words had struck me, and for the second time I saw that they produced on the Sorbonne professor the same paralyzing effect. M. Darzac's first anxiety showed itself when he turned his eyes in the direction of Daddy Jacques. But, occupied as he was at another window, he had seen nothing. Then, tremblingly opening his pocketbook, he put the piece of paper into it, sighing, "My God!"

During this time Rouletabille had mounted into the opening of the firegrate—that is to say, he had got upon the bricks of a furnace—and was attentively examining the chimney, which grew narrower toward the top, the outlet from it being closed with sheets of iron fastened into the brickwork, through which passed three small chimneys.

"Impossible to get out that way," he said, jumping back into the laboratory. "Besides, even if he had tried to do it, he would have brought all that ironwork down to the ground. No, no; it is not on that side we have to search."

Rouletabille next examined the furniture and opened the doors of the cabinets. Then he came to the windows, through which, he declared, no one could possibly have passed. At the second window he found Daddy Jacques in contemplation.

"Well, Daddy Jacques," he said, "what are you looking at?"

"That policeman who is always going round and round the lake. Another of those fellows who think they can see better than anybody else!"

"You don't know Frederic Larsan, Daddy Jacques, or you wouldn't speak of him in that way," said Rouletabille in a melancholy tone. "If there is any one who will find the murderer it will be he." And Rouletabille heaved a deep sigh.

CHAPTER VII.

In Which Rouletabille Sets Out on an Expedition Under the Bed.

ROULETABILLE, having pushed open the door of the yellow room, paused on the threshold. The chamber was dark. Daddy Jacques was about to open the blinds when Rouletabille stopped him.

"Did not the tragedy take place in complete darkness?" he asked.

"No, young man; I don't think so. Mademoiselle always had a night light on her table, and I lit it every evening before she went to bed. I was a sort of chambermaid, you must understand, when the evening came. The real chambermaid did not come here much before the morning. Mademoiselle worked late—far into the night."

"Some way from the bed."

"Can you light the burner now?"

"The lamp is broken and the oil that was in it was spilled when the table was upset. All the rest of the things in the room remain just as they were. I have only to open the blinds for you to see."

"Wait."

Rouletabille went back into the laboratory, closed the shutters of the two windows and the door of the vestibule. When we were in complete darkness he lit a wax vesta and asked Daddy Jacques to move to the middle of the chamber with it to the place where the night light was burning that night.

Daddy Jacques, who was in his stockings—he usually left his sabots in the vestibule—entered the yellow room with his bit of a vesta. We vaguely distinguished objects overthrown on the floor, a bed in one corner and in front of us to the left the gleam of a looking glass hanging on the wall near to the bed.

"That will do. You may now open the blinds," said Rouletabille.

"Don't come any farther," Daddy Jacques begged. "You may make marks with your boots, and nothing must be deranged. It's an idea of the magistrate's, though he has nothing more to do here."

And he pushed open the shutter. The pale daylight entered from without, throwing a sinister light on the saffron colored walls. The floor—for though the laboratory and the vestibule were tiled the yellow room had a flooring of wood—was covered with a single yellow mat which was large enough to cover nearly the whole room, under the bed and under the dressing table, the only piece of furniture that remained upright. The center round table, the night table and two chairs had been overturned. These did not prevent a large stain of blood being visible on the mat, made, as Daddy Jacques informed us, by the blood which had flowed from the wound on Mlle. Stangerson's forehead. Besides these stains drops of blood had fallen in all directions, in line with the visible traces of the footsteps, large and black, of the murderer. Everything led to the presumption that these drops of blood had fallen from the wound of the man who had for a moment placed his red hand on the wall. There were other traces of the same hand on the wall, but much less distinct.

"See—see this blood on the wall!" I could not help exclaiming. "The man who pressed his hand so heavily upon it in the darkness must certainly have thought that he was pushing at a door. That's why he pressed on it so hard, leaving on the yellow paper the terrible evidence. I don't think there are many hands in the world of that sort. It is big and strong, and the fingers are nearly all one as long as the other. The thumb is wanting, and we have only the mark of the palm, but if we follow the trace of the hand," I continued, "we see that after leaving its imprint on the wall the touch sought the door, found it and then felt for the lock."

"No doubt," interrupted Rouletabille, chuckling, "only there is no blood either on the lock or on the bolt."

"What does that prove?" I rejoined, with a good sense of which I was proud. "He might have opened the lock with his left hand, which would have been quite natural, his right hand being wounded."

"He didn't open it at all," Daddy Jacques again exclaimed. "We are not fools, and there were four of us when we burst open the door."

"What a queer hand! Look what a queer hand it is!" I said.

"It is a very natural hand," said Rouletabille, "of which the shape has been deformed by its having slipped on the wall. The man dried his hand on the wall. He must be a man about five feet eight in height."

"How do you come at that?"

"By the height of the marks on the wall."

My friend next occupied himself with the mark of the bullet in the wall. It was a round hole.

"This ball was fired straight, not from above, and consequently not from below."

Rouletabille went back to the door and carefully examined the lock and the bolt, satisfying himself that the door had certainly been burst open from the outside, and, further, that the key had been found in the lock on the inside of the chamber. He finally satisfied himself that with the key in the lock the door could not possibly be opened from without with another key. Having made sure of all these details, he let fall these words, "That's better!" Then, sitting down on the ground, he hastily took off his boots and in his socks went into the room.

The first thing he did was to examine minutely the overturned furniture. We watched him in silence.

"Young fellow, you are giving yourself a great deal of trouble," said Daddy Jacques ironically.

Rouletabille raised his head and said:

"You have spoken the simple truth, Daddy Jacques. Your mistress did not have her hair in bands that evening. I was a donkey to have believed she did."

Then, with the suppleness of a serpent, he slipped under the bed. Presently we heard him ask:

"At what time, M. Jacques, did M. and Mlle. Stangerson arrive at the laboratory?"

"At 6 o'clock."

"Yes, he's been under here, that's certain. In fact, there was nowhere else where he could have hidden himself. Here, too, are the marks of his hobnails. When you entered, all four of you, did you look under the bed?"

"At once. We drew it right out of its place."

"And between the mattresses?"

"There was only one on the bed, and on that mademoiselle was placed, and M. Stangerson and the concierge immediately carried it into the laboratory. Under the mattress there was nothing but the metal netting, which could not conceal anything or anybody. Remember, monsieur, that there were four of us, and we couldn't fail to see everything, the chamber is so small and scantily furnished, and all was locked behind in the pavilion."

I ventured on a hypothesis:

"Perhaps he got away with the mattress—in the mattress! Anything is possible in the face of such a mystery. In their distress of mind M. Stangerson and the concierge may not have noticed they were bearing a double weight, especially if the concierge were an accomplice. I throw out this hypothesis for what it is worth, but it explains many things and particularly the fact that neither the laboratory nor the vestibule bears any traces of the footmarks found in the room. If in carrying mademoiselle on the mattress from the laboratory they rested for a moment there might have been an opportunity for the man in it to escape."

"And then?" asked Rouletabille, deliberately laughing under the bed.

I felt rather vexed and replied:

"I don't know, but anything appears possible."

"The examining magistrate had the same idea, monsieur," said Daddy Jacques, "and he carefully examined the mattress. He was obliged to laugh at the idea, monsieur, as your friend is doing now, for whoever heard of a mattress having a double bottom?"

My friend alone seemed able to talk intelligently. He called out from under the bed:

"The mat here has been moved out of place. Who did it?"

"We did, monsieur," explained Daddy Jacques. "When we could not find the assassin we asked ourselves whether there was not some hole in the floor."

"There is not," replied Rouletabille. "Is there a cellar?"

"No, there's no cellar. But that has not stopped our searching and has not prevented the examining magistrate and his registrar from studying the floor plank by plank, as if there had been a cellar under it."

The reporter then reappeared. His eyes were sparkling and his nostrils quivered. He remained on his hands and knees. Thus he made his way to the four corners of the room, so to speak, sniffing and going around everything—everything that we could see, which was not much, and everything that we could not see, which must have been infinite.

The toilet table was a simple table standing on four legs. There was nothing about it by which it could possibly be changed into a temporary hiding place. There was not a closet or cupboard. Mlle. Stangerson kept her wardrobe at the chateau.

Rouletabille literally passed his nose and hands along the walls, constructed of solid brickwork. When he had finished with the walls and passed his agile fingers over every portion of the yellow paper covering them he reached to the ceiling, which he was able to touch by mounting on a chair placed on the toilet table, and by moving this ingeniously constructed stage from place to place he examined every foot of it. When he had finished his scrutiny of the ceiling, where he carefully examined the hole made by the second bullet, he approached the window and once more examined the iron bars and blinds, all of which were solid and intact. At last he gave a grunt of satisfaction and declared, "Now I am at ease!"

"Well, do you believe that the poor dear young lady was shut up when she was being murdered—when she cried out for help?" wailed Daddy Jacques.

"Yes," said the young reporter, drying his forehead; "the yellow room was as tightly shut as an iron safe."

"The Bete du Bon Dieu," muttered Daddy Jacques—"the Bete du Bon Dieu herself, if she had committed the crime, could not have escaped. Listen! Do you hear it? Hush!"

Daddy Jacques made us a sign to keep quiet and, stretching his arm toward the wall nearest the forest, listened to something which we could not hear.

THE HUSBAND WAS FORGETFUL

Although people are often called upon to wait at railway stations long past scheduled time a farmer's wife from Douro and a lady friend had a longer stay at the Lakefield station yesterday than one would even expect in the snowdrift season.

The lady's husband left them at the station while he went to make some purchases in the village. Instead of calling for them when he came back he took the boat alone and it was not until Young's Point was reached that he thought of his wife and her friend.

At Young's Point the captain telephoned to Lakefield and the boat was held at Mount Julian till the next boat with the Lakefield contingent of two arrived.

Come to the Strawberry Social on the beautiful lawns of St. John's Church on Wednesday June 22nd, 6.30 to 10 p.m. Grand Opera House Orchestra. Strawberries and Cream. Flower and Candy tent. Admission 10 cents.

WHY COBOURG?

The printer picnicers of the city have changed their place and date this year, for various reasons. "A change is as good as a rest," 'tis said, so for the nonce Idyl Wyld on Civic Holiday is taboo, and the local printerian bunch are looking forward to their patrons rallying and coming with them to Cobourg on the afternoon of Saturday, the 25th of June.

Why Cobourg? Well, it's a pleasant spot and within easy reach. Leaving Peterborough at 1.30 p.m., 'tis expected that trippers will be promenading King street, Cobourg, before the clock strikes the hour of three.

This "Summer Home of Wealthy Americans" will provide entertainment for the Electric City crowd and added to domestic charms the printer boys fully intend making things interesting during their stay.

The G.T.R. Ferry (Ontario No. 1), will attract many of the visitors. The come and go of this interesting vessel being a feature of Cobourg daily life.

Victoria Park on the Lake Ontario shore, whose very name suggests cool breezes and pleasant loungings, is not to be too lightly considered these melting days.

The local typos are meeting their craft brethren from Rochester and we dare not say what this meeting can make possible.

There are to be sports—such sports as real sportsmen love and indulge in plentifully. Then there will be the inevitable baseball match—that is, if the Review can lay off two or three of their stars so that the Examiner bunch will take heart thereat and play.

This is a boost most valuable—quite a few of the sadly disappointed pleasure-seekers of last Saturday are coming with us as Weather Prophet Peters (a man whose word never fails) has made it known that the finest brand of weather is to be handed out on Saturday afternoon and evening next. So come along patrons, old and new, have a good time with the local makers of up-to-date newspapers and classy job work.

Meeting on Thursday

Excellent progress is being made in the arrangements in connection with the T.A.S. picnic on July 1st. The details are well under way, and from present indications the picnic will be an immense success.

The committee will meet at St. Alphonse's Lyceum on Thursday evening.

Special Meeting

A special meeting of members of St. Peter's Court, C.O.F., will be held in their hall to-night, Saturday, at 8 p.m. for the purpose of arranging for the funeral of late Bro. F. Fitzgerald. BRO. J. O'BRIEN, sec.

WHERE IS THE JUICY CHICKEN? MARKET TO-DAY IN PETERBORO

Where o where is the chicken market gone

They are late in getting around at the Peterborough market. In Hamilton the farmers commence to bring in their produce at midnight and in busy little Welland they get busy about six, but here there is nothing doing in the selling line until about ten o'clock. It isn't the farmer's fault, it is the fault of the woman with the basket. She comes late.

The market this morning was not large.

The heavens opened and it poured last night, and perhaps the farmer thought that it would be a wet day to-day and didn't get ready.

And where were the chickens?

A reporter for the Review who was on hand didn't see a single feather, or a yellow leg sticking from a basket. Perhaps the hens are too busy laying eggs to have their necks chopped. But there were a half dozen squealers, little fellows. One lot of these pigs brought $12 a pair, they were Yorkshires, and the other lot, black ones, went at $11.

Frank Stabler paid 9 1-4 live weight yesterday.

Butter is twenty-three cents a pound to-day, and the cows have been in fields that are green for quite a while.

"Is the price going to drop?"

"It may," replied a farmer, but it won't stay down long.

Eggs went at twenty cents.

"Will eggs drop?"

"No," replied a man who has many hens, "I expect to see them go up again.

Joseph Swain, of Cavan, was there with many bags of potatoes.

"What kind?" asked a lady pulling open the bag.

"American Wonders."

"How much?"

Forty-five cents.

There were a great many bags of potatoes on the market to-day and the price mentioned prevailed.

The feature of the market was the absence of the chicken.

CANON DAVIDSON ON EXECUTING BY HANGING

Yesterday at the closing session of the Anglican Synod at Toronto, Rev. Canon Davidson presented a motion to the effect that the Parliament of Canada be memoralized to substitute for capital punishment by hanging, some other means more humane and in harmony with the spirit of the present age. The motion was seconded by Rev. L. E. Skey, rector of St. Anns, Toronto.

In presenting the motion, Rev. Canon Davidson drew attention to the fact that capital punishment, was instituted in a long distant age which had entirely different ideas and customs to the present one. In bygone centuries, executions were public, in order to impress the crowd, but it was found by experience that there was no deterrent influence, as intended as crimes increase with startling rapidity, and that the multitude of sightseers were degraded by the inhuman performance. A change was made in the place of execution. It was held in the jail yard in order to secure privacy. Canon Davidson pointed out that this end had been defeated as through the public press, every gruesome detail of these terrible events was published to the world, with the necessary result of widespread degrading influence upon the public which had no counterpart in by-gone times.

Moreover the entire spirit of the age had undergone a radical change, in a humane and merciful direction which in this department found expression by radical changes in methods, but still the degrading institution of hanging was allowed to continue through attention not being paid to it.

Was it not sufficient for a man to forfeit his life, his most precious possession, without being required to do it in an inhuman fashion, by a people supposed to be actuated by the merciful spirit of Christianity and Christian civilization.

Owing to the late hour, only a brief discussion took place at the Synod and a substitute motion was carried by a very slender majority that owing to the radical nature of the subject a longer consideration was necessary and it would come before the Synod at its next meeting.

CALL OF THE WEST IS THE CALL FOR ITS EVANGELIZATION

Address of Compelling Interest by Rev. John McNeill at Evening Session of Baptist Association — The Morning and Afternoon Meetings.

The morning session of the Baptist Association meeting yesterday commenced at 9 a.m. with devotional exercises conducted by the Rev. George Roland, of Norwood.

The report of the committee of resolutions was read by the Rev. Carey Sage, M.A., of Campbellford, the most important of which were one of loyalty to King George, and another that no change should be made to the Coronation Oath, and one in favor of local option.

A very interesting address on "The Prayer Meeting" by the Rev. J. S. Laflair, followed. He said that the prayer meeting should be the place for wholesome spiritual food, cheerful intercourse, and people should come to pray, and not to talk.

An open discussion followed. The meeting then adjourned till 2 p.m.

The first address at the afternoon session was on Grand Ligne Missions, and the speaker, Rev. J. R. Webb, represented the Feller Institute in Quebec. There are over 200 pupils at the Institute, he reported, and every year sees an increasing number. One-tenth of them are French, and a great many French Romanists.

Rev. Dr. Norton gave an interesting report on Home Missions in Ontario.

Rev. J. B. Kennedy dealt with the moral reform problem in a stirring address, in which he referred, among other things, to race track gambling and the liquor question.

AT NIGHT.

No more striking address was given during the three days the association met than the one last night by Rev. John McNeill, who spoke on "The Call of the West."

The new moderator for the year, Dr. W. D. Scott took the chair and made a brief speech thanking the gathering for his appointment.

The Rev. John McNeil was called on for his address. He possesses a pleasing personality and is a witty and interesting speaker. Mr. McNeil said in part, "I am here to plead for a cause that should need no pleading, and to justify a cause that needs no justification. I speak of the call of the great west. This cause needs our earnest prayer and sympathy.

WANT TO RAISE $75,000.

Four years ago our convention met in Peterborough, and when the contributions were made for the support of western missionary efforts, the response was not very large. Three years ago $12,000 was given. Two years ago it advanced to $20,000. Last year we appealed for $25,000 and received $23,000.

Now we are looking forward to raising $75,000 annually to be used in aid of this great mission field.

Now there are 14,000 members of the Baptist church in the west, 250 missionaries, 11,000 S. S. scholars, 2 colleges, one at Brandon and one at Sunderland, with 27 instructors and 400 enrollments in the two colleges combined. Ten years ago their outlay was $63,000, last year it amounted to $300,000.

WORK AMONG FOREIGNERS.

The work among the foreigners is very important. There are 120,000 Germans in that country and about 100,000 Scandinavians live in the west. An example of the interest taken in them is the installation of a chair devoted to their language in the Brandon college.

The work being done for the Indians is also most encouraging.

THE DANGER OF MATERIALISM.

Many evils are facing the people in that country, and the greatest of these is materialism.

A LAWLESS START.

The early settlers in the western part of the United States and Canada were mostly Godless people. The marriage ties were not sacredly regarded, and the west grew up a great lawless country. The reflex influence of western lawlessness is the cause of what wickedness is predominant in the New England States to-day.

The time will come when the great man of the west will be the dominating feature of Canadian life, not, however, if he remains unconverted.

A GENERAL ENLIGHTENMENT.

Great efforts are being made for their conversion. In Winnipeg the scriptures are printed in 75 different tongues. Last year 1,500,000 settlers came to Canada, and a school a day was organized. Seventy per cent of the immigrants to Canada came from Northern Europe, and these make splendid citizens and are most desirable. These people come here with a great many false ideas of religion, yet in all of them there is some great element of good, which, if developed, will be a great influence for the betterment of our land.

If we could only wield the dominant characteristics of all the peoples represented in our western land, into one great body of men, thinking alike, we could accomplish the salvation of our western life.

The speaker closed with a strong appeal for funds.

THE CHARGE IS REDUCED

Sentence was deferred until Monday.

Mr. O'Connell entered objections to the jury's finding.

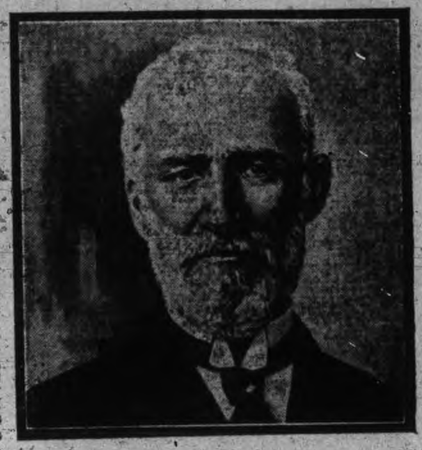
"I FEEL IT MY DUTY
To Give You a Statement In Regard To 'Fruit-a-tives'"

HARDWICKE, MIRAMICHI, N.B., Jan. 17th. 1910.

"I feel it my duty to give to you and the world an unsolicited statement in respect to the wonderful cure I received by taking 'Fruit-a-tives.' Chronic Constipation was the complaint I suffered with for years. My general health was miserable as a result of this disease, and I became depressed and alarmed. I was treated by physicians without the slightest permanent benefit, and I tried all kinds of pills and tablets but nothing did me any good.



I saw the strong testimonial in favor of 'Fruit-a-tives' by New Brunswick's 'Grand Old Man', the Hon. John Costigan, and I knew that anything he stated was honest and true and given only to help his fellow-men. I tried 'Fruit-a-tives' and the effects were most marvellous, and now I am entirely well from all my Chronic Constipation that I suffered from for so many years. My general health is once more excellent and I cannot say too much to express my thanks for the great benefits derived from taking 'Fruit-a-tives.'"

A. G. WILLISTON.

"Fruit-a-tives" is not gotten up by druggists or expert chemists—who know nothing about disease and the needs of the human body—but is the scientific discovery of a well known physician, and is the only medicine in the world made of fruit juices.

50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, or trial size, 25c. At all dealers, or sent, postpaid, on receipt of price by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

DEDICATED TO AN ICICLE

'Ain't it funny how the weatherman is handing out a fine of weather that makes us wilt some, but makes the nights sublime. That we kick and scowl and say some things, sometimes we're awful mad, about this gol darn weather, which we say makes us feel sad. 'Twasn't long ago we hollored about the cold and dismal clime for it rained and blew, it made us chew, we could do no crime. We said that when the summer came, we'd never once complain about this brand of sunny days, so long as summer came. We said we'd be on hand at church, at Sunday school and such, and vowed that things so dear to us, we'd leave alone untouched. But now it's here, we kick and kick and scold and kick some more, for we're all a bunch of kickers, we are kickers to the core.

TO COME TO CITY OF PETERBORO

ALLEN—LOFT.

A very pretty house wedding took place at the residence of Mrs. Jos. Richardson, Charles street, at high noon to-day, when her daughter, Frederica, was united in marriage to Mr. Albert E. Allen, of Peterborough. The Rev. W. G. Clarke, pastor of the Methodist church, performed the ceremony.

The bride looked very pretty in a dress of cream silk, nun's veiling, and carried a bouquet of cream roses. The bridesmaid, Miss Edna Garnett, cousin of the bride, wore a pale blue dress and carried a bouquet of pink roses. Mr. Will Allen, Peterborough, supported the groom.

Mendelssohn's wedding march was played by Miss Edna Adamson.

After the ceremony the guests repaired to the dining room, where a sumptuous wedding breakfast was served and congratulations extended to the bride and groom.

The presents were many and beautiful, testifying to the esteem in which the bride was held by her numerous friends.

Mr. and Mrs. Allen left by the steamer Caspian for a brief sojourn in Rochester, Cleveland and other United States Points, and on their return will reside at Peterborough.

The brides' travelling dress was copenhagen blue with tuscan hat trimmed with blue.

The many friends of the young couple join with The Guide in wishing them much happiness.—Port Hope Guide.

A CIRCUS COMING TO PETERBORO

Lovers of the out of ordinary amusement will be interested in the announcement that the Mighty Haag shows are coming to Peterborough, June 28th, afternoon and evening, presenting decidedly the largest and greatest program of original, unique and thrilling featured act known today to the show world. This vast tented amusement enterprise is alone in a class by itself, without a rival.

Nothing like the imperial performance presented by Ernest Haag was ever before dreamed or dared by the boldest managers.

Whatever your preference, you will find plenty to interest, astonish and edify you; there are thrilling aerial acts during every moment of which one expects to see the intrepid performers hurled into eternity, artistic and sensational equestrianism, incredible and bewildering athletic and acrobatic numbers, blood chilling jockey, hurdle and chariot races, amazingly venturesome bicyclists, and phenomenal exhibitions by fierce wild beasts. In fact, so numerous and varied are the novelties offered in the rings and upon the elevated stages, and upon the mammoth hippodrome track by these shows, lack of space will not permit each of these to be mentioned. The quantity and quality of the features are such as to really stigger comprehension.

It matters not what shows you have seen or how big the Mighty Haag shows have been in years gone by, this season they completely overwhelm all past efforts.

SPORTING NEWS

WHY CAN'T THEY FIGHT?

Sporting Editor of the Review:

Sir,—Why should they stop the prize fight between James J. Jeffries and Jack Johnson, who have made preparations to pit their strength and skill against the other to decide which will be acclaimed the champion?

Just now millions of eyes are scanning the papers wanting to know about who is going to be the next American national hero.

Parsons will read the story of the contest, so will deacons, and as for the rabble, they will fight for their papers. Men stop to see a dog fight in the street, and women peep out through the windows.

If these men want to punch each other why not let them do so? They will do it openly. There isn't a reader who would not take a good licking for the fortune at stake. There is human interest in a prize fight. That's why the people read of them and that's why the journals of the country are spending great sums to get the best accounts of the battle.

Many will be at the fight. People are not fond of anything that is sterotyped, and this is, perhaps, why there are so few people at church and so many who will pay their money to go to fights, concerts and the theatres.

The question who will be the next American hero—Johnson or Jeffries—is exciting as much attention as Roosevelt did when he was in the midst of his great trust-busting stunt a few years ago.

Wheel Was Wrenched Off

Two young fellows who were in the rig to which it was attached alighted at the American House, and the horse made a sudden bolt for liberty. A wheel of the rig caught in a telegraph post and was wrenched off.

Musician Suicides.

Kingston, June 18.—Leaving a note saying he was in financial difficulties, Frederick Wistz, aged 40, of Ogdensburg, N.Y., a former Kingstonian, fired a bullet into his head in the Iroquois Hotel at noon, and died three hours later. His wife is in Beaverton, N. Y. Deceased was a shoemaker, and musician, playing in the Grand Opera House orchestar and in the 14th Regiment band.

"Sorry for you, my dear wife, but think this is the only thing I can do," read a note left to his wife. He prayed that God would have mercy on his soul, and asked that the Oddfellows take charge of the funeral.

AN AMBITIOUS MUSICIAN.

Donald Heins of Ottawa Has Toiled Hard.

It is quite natural to suppose that the winning by the Ottawa Symphony Orchestra, three years in succession of the Earl Grey Musical Trophy will arouse much curiosity as to the individuality and methods of Mr. Donald Heins, the organizer and conductor of the orchestra. Mr. Heins is an Englishman, not yet forty years of age. His musical education was acquired in England and on the continent of Europe. His speciality is the violin, and before he came to Canada, some eight or ten years ago, his services were much in requisition in London as a soloist. He is also a capable organist and pianist, and almost ever since going to Ottawa he has been organist of Knox Church, which has one of the largest Presbyterian congregations in the capital. Of late years, with an augmented choir and full orchestra, he has given one of the standard oratorios in the church each spring. He is best known in Ottawa, however, by his work in connection with the Canadian Conservatory of Music, which is affiliated with the Ottawa Ladies College. The present symphony orchestra, in which, by the way, Mrs. Heins plays leading violin, is the outcome of a string orchestra organized in a modest way, but with great ambitions, no longer than four years ago, with Mr. Heins' pupils as a nucleus. The ambition of Donald Heins is to become a great conductor. For the achievement of his goal he has both instinct and determination. Having collected a nucleus, as explained, he proceeded, according to his own language, to "lick them into shape" by the method that spells success in every sphere. He first breathed into the organization enthusiasm and the desire of achievement, and then he made it work. Practice, practice, and then more practice, was what he preached. The entire week before his orchestra went to Toronto to take part in the Earl Grey competition, Heins set aside all his professional engagements and devoted every morning, afternoon and evening to rehearsals of the orchestra.

Here is an example of Donald Heins' thoroughness. For rounding off the strings in an orchestra, a certain number of wind instruments are needed. Now the best "wind" players in Ottawa as in other Canadian cities, are all professionals and belong to the musical union. So Heins had difficulty in getting wind players accustomed to the class of music played by his orchestra. He had to draw them from the military bands. To facilitate his work, therefore, it was desirable that there should be at least one military band in Ottawa from which he could recruit the sort of players he needed. If that military band could be conducted and trained by himself, might he not be able to train up players suitable for his orchestra? Heins accepted, with all the drudgery and time it represents, the leadership of the brass band of the 43rd, Duke of Cornwall's Own Rifles. This was only a little over a year ago. The band was then in a state of disorganization, but he has already brought it up to a high standard, but what is more to the point so far as Mr. Heins is personally concerned, he has already obtained for his orchestra much greater wind efficiency. Heins has shown himself such a good military band conductor that an American city recently offered him a position as band leader at a salary equal to what he is making for all his work in Ottawa, providing he would confine his attention to the band. Heins declined. It was a side trail away from his desired goal.

A Heroine of the Boer War.

Lady Sarah Wilson, who with her husband and party, recently passed through Canada on her way home from Australia, was, it will be remembered, one of the heroines of the one of the popular heroines of the South African War. By the way, the newspaper despatches have been somewhat mixed up as to the composition of the party, speaking of Captain Wilson as Lady Sarah's husband and mention that Col. Wilson is "also one of the party." As a matter of fact, Lieut.-Col. Wilson is her ladyship's husband, having obtained two grades of promotion from the captaincy he held at the time he served on Baden-Powell's staff, during the defence of Mafeking. He is in his forty-fifth year and is the eldest son of the late Sir Samuel Wilson, M.P. He entered the Royal Horse Guards in 1887 and was twice mentioned in despatches for his services on the staff in South Africa. His wife was such a popular heroine during the war that the fame won by her soldier husband was somewhat overshadowed. Lady Sarah (Isabella Augusta) Wilson is the sixth daughter of the seventh Duke of Marlborough and is consequently an aunt of Winston Churchill, whom she resembles in venturesome disposition. It will be [illegible] that during the South African war she was taken prisoner by the Boers outside Mafeking and was later exchanged for a Boer prisoner. Her book, South African Memories," was one of the brightest, literary products of the great war.

Where Is Tecumseh's Grave?

Considerable interest has been added to the discussion over the whereabouts of the grave of the great Indian chief Tecumseh, by the story which comes from an old British soldier now living in England, to the effect that Tecumseh was buried in the bottom of McGregor's Creek, near Chatham. Indians were often known to bury their fallen braves in water to keep them from being scalped by their enemies.

It is said that Tecumseh's body has never been taken up, so that the stories that he was buried at Moraviantown, Wallaceburg, or Stanne Island cannot be true. The old soldier who is responsible for the story was a long time member of the old Twenty-fourth Regiment of Chatham. An effort is now being made to get into communication with him.

CRAWFORD IN KILTS.

The Novelist's Remark When He Saw Himself as a Child.

One of the best known guides in the capitol at Washington used to be Colonel Jasper E. Snow, formerly a Kansas City lawyer, who always sat in Republican conventions and voted for Blaine as long as there was a Blaine to vote for.

He had met Mr. Crawford in Florence, Italy, and when the novelist came to Washington Colonel Snow was the first person who showed him the doors made by the novelist's father, Thomas Crawford.

These are the senate bronze doors on the eastern portico. They represent scenes connected with the Revolution and the founding of the government.

"Yes," said he, "mother used to wear her hair just like that."

"But I wonder if I ever really did look like that."

GARDEN HINTS.

A Fernery and How to Arrange It Inexpensively.

Many a bare and ugly recess in the wall of a house has been made into a beautiful and interesting spot by converting it into a fernery. I can call to mind, said a grower of plants, the furnishing of just such a place, a small glass house, which by its cool, shady position was used to keep a few plants longer in perfection than they would have remained in a sunny part. In the course of time some building and planting took place, which effectually blocked out the sunlight and rendered the place unfit for flowering plants. The stages were removed, and in their place some rock work was built upon a very simple plan, which proved delightfully effective, as affording at all seasons a pretty scene and serviceable accommodations for the growth of plants. The back and walls of the house were faced with a rugged mass of burs from a brick field, making it something like the interior of a cave. A bricklayer was employed for this part of the work, which was commenced at some little distance from the wall and gradually brought nearer as it proceeded upward, occasional large blocks being firmly cemented to the wall and strengthened with holdfasts, and between the walls and the burs good loam was rammed in from bottom to top. The planting of this rockery took some time to complete single handed, but was interesting work. The task was to make the pockets or openings left for the purpose at intervals in the work and insert the ferns. Some of the larger ones were planted in projecting receptacles, but in most cases it was found the best plan to stuff the necessary soil into a chink or gap, then place the fern in it and lastly to introduce a piece of bur to close it in. The strong growers soon found their way into the loam, of which the bulk of the bank and filling of wall consisted. Some varieties need special compost in planting, usually a mixture of turfy peat torn in pieces, with a proportion of silver sand and broken pots added, and in some cases broken stone and pots with sandy peat are suitable. It is quite worth while to build a house expressly for growing ferns to perfection by giving them the shade and moisture required. The wonderful variety of form in fern foliage is amazing. The fairylike elegance of many kinds and the magnificent fronds displayed by others supply some wonderful contrasts. Then there are climbing, trailing and pendulous kinds suitable for suspending in baskets and ferns with variegated foliage. Selaginellas, although not ferns, answer well to plant anywhere on ledges and in crevices in the fernery, and they soon spread right and left, sometimes running a yard or two where there is no soil at all, feeding on the moisture supplied by other plants.

A Culinary Wrinkle.

Here's a new way to use the little pieces of pie dough that are left after the pie is ready for the oven. It's accomplished with several pieces of round hard wood about four inches long. The crust should be rolled thin and cut into strips of such a size that they can be put around the sticks with one end lapping a little over the other. Flour the sticks, roll the strips around them and bake on tins in a hot oven. When the crust has partly cooled the sticks can be slipped out. The spaces are to be filled with whipped cream, jelly, marmalade or any other confection for which any member of the family manifests a preference.

What Some Girls Love to Eat.

Discover the girl who does not adore what she calls a "spread" and you discover a young lady who has missed half the fun of life. Here are some extraordinary combinations that were actually made and eaten—and survived—in a girls' dormitory:

Oriental Dream.—Use four slices of cake (angel cake preferred), the white of one egg, one-half cupful of chopped almonds, one-half cupful each of chopped dates and figs, four teaspoonfuls of sugar. Lay a slice of angel cake (or sponge cake) on a plate. Blanch almonds by putting them in a bowl, pouring boiling water on them and then rubbing off the brown coating with a clean napkin. Dry thoroughly before using. Chop the almonds, dates and figs and mix together. Beat the white of the egg stiff and add the fruit and nuts and heap on top of the slices of cake in pyramid form. Sprinkle with a teaspoonful of sugar. First a layer of nut meats and then a layer of fruit may be spread on the cake and the beaten white of egg piled on top.

Tropical Treat.—Use one cupful of granulated sugar, one-half cupful of nut meat, one cupful of mixed chopped figs, dates and seedless raisins. Have a buttered tin cracker box or plate ready. Melt the sugar carefully in pan or skillet over a slow fire. Do not stir. The instant it is melted take from the fire and quickly add nuts and fruit without stirring and pour into buttered dish.

Sweet Sixteen Sandwiches.—Buy square baker's rusks, cut them up and down in thin slices. Spread with butter or peanut butter. Then spread with sweet chocolate melted, or chocolate cream drops mashed or cut in slices can be used as filling.

Nightcaps.—Use marshmallow candies, salt wafers, nuts. On each wafer spread a layer of chopped nut meats or nut butter. Toast a marshmallow by holding it over a flame on a hatpin and put one or two marshmallows on each wafer, or the marshmallows, nuts and crackers may be arranged and all put into a slow oven for a few minutes and heated together.

HYGIENIC LAUNDERING

How to Prevent Grip From Going Through the House.

THE CHANTICLEER CRAZE.

Barnyard Influences Pervade Whole Realm of Fashion—Roosters For Hair Ornaments—Individual Touches on Suits to Lift Them Out of Ready Made Class.

Dear Elsa—I'm going to wash all my pocket handkerchiefs hereafter myself. Why? I'll tell you. But before I begin my story I should like to ease my mind about the difference small things make in the success of household management. The amount of irritation, for instance, arising from the misplacement of a box of matches is out of all proportion to the cause of it, and I think some special genius presides over the fortunes of handkerchiefs.

Why has a little Jap housewife so serene a brow and such tranquil eyes? At this moment, when all my best handkerchiefs have gone astray at the "Sunshine" laundry, I should say that it is because people in Japan use paper handkerchiefs and burn them when they are done with them.

And whoever heard of "grippy" colds "going through the house" in the mikado's country as they do with us? To wash handkerchiefs at home is a real economy, and, as I stated at the beginning of this letter, it's the course I'm going to pursue. And I'm going to boil them with a piece of orris root in the water, so they'll have a delicious, elusive fragrance of the violet clinging to them.

But, to come back to the handkerchief as a grip distributer, a friend of mine who is a trained nurse recently told me that if mouchoirs used by members of the family suffering from colds were at once plunged into cold water plentifully supplied with salt there would be less danger of the disease spreading. You must put them into the water immediately and not wait for the regular wash day. Into this pail should be placed the pillowslips used by the sufferer, for if these things used so intimately are allowed to be put aside in the clothesbasket they dry and the microbes are released to go wandering off in search of pastures new. The salt water, the nurse said, cleanses and disinfects at the same time. On wash day take the handkerchiefs out of soak and rub over with castile soap, then boil. To do this place in cold water, add a little powdered dry soap or soap jelly and let them come to a boil slowly. Rinse and blue in water slightly colored with liquid blue. Roll up for ironing while still wet and iron after a good shaking and they will be exactly the right stiffness.

While on the laundering subject let me give you another tip. Never use a hot iron on silk handkerchiefs or those decorated with colored borders or embroidery. Salt water "stays" colors, and embroidery first dipped in salt water keeps its color intact through the rest of the process of washing. And it is well to know that faded colors revive in a final rinsing of vinegar and water—one-third vinegar and two-thirds water.

A Place For Microbes.

Don't think I'm a faddist on the germ subject. I'm not in the same class with the old lady at the pure food lecture who when the speaker of the afternoon opened her talk with the quotation, "The quality of mercy is not strained," called out in a shrill voice, "Well, if it ain't strained it ain't sanitary, and we don't want nothing to do with it." Still, I do agree that a wholesome horror of microbes is a good thing for a housekeeper to possess, and few of them have any too great an aversion to these dread invaders of our hearth. Some people, though, make themselves unnecessarily nervous about these microscopic enemies. It is just as well to remember sometimes that even microbes have their place and use in the economy of nature.

To change the subject abruptly, I am running on rather low fashion speed this spring and am economizing on my cloth suit. In fact, I've bought a plain hopsacking model in one of the new dark blue shades and am braiding the collar, cuffs, pockets and belt at my leisure. It is these accessories that "make" a costume of anything like dressy character. The ornamental work put on inexpensive tailor mades is of necessity cheap, while often the material and workmanship of the suit are very good. Just a handmade touch on the collar, cuffs, pockets and belt and the suit rises to the plane of the expensive model.

One would have expected that soutache, so abundantly used these many months and years, would decline in vogue this season. But here it is as much used as ever. My suit, which you will see reproduced in the drawing, owes all its distinctiveness to the work of my own fair fingers. The coat is of the new prescribed length and is a shape that is familiar among spring models. The belt crosses in the back and front, while the sides of the coat are plain. The tunic is also of the cross over order, and the hem of the skirt is trimmed with braid.

Chanticleer's Day.

And speaking of the shops reminds me that there is scarcely a counter in the New York department shops that does not display some article named for the noblest of birds, the chanticleer. In fact, in all the fabrics, from heavy linen to the finest of silks, the vivid chanticleer color which is derived from the comb and wattles of the lord of the barnyard has already found its place. The authentic shade is a bright watermelon pink, bordering on the cerise, but one finds any startling red, from a vermilion to a scarlet, posing as such, and the color is introduced in the most unexpected places, blue coats, shepherd's plaid dresses, dotted foulards, hats, wraps and hair ribbons being livened up with a piping or an edge of it. The cock and the hen pheasant have their portraits done in silk and water colors on parasols and hand bags, and on cushion tops and trimming bands the noble bird also appears. Stockings have chanticleer lace insets, and there are little roosters to be worn in the hair if there is to be found a woman with sufficient nerve to carry out the style seriously.

There is, dear, no such thing as a chanticleer hat, for any hat trimmed with a whole bird or even wings or quills of the golden pheasant colorings is called a chanticleer. And, let me whisper in your ear, we Americans are the only people making a fuss about the rooster anyhow. In Paris the craze was a nine days' wonder and is now safely passed. Dorothy D., who has just come over from the French capital, tells me that as a vogue fashion the chanticleer is a thing of ancient history. Devotedly,

Good Icing.

Boiled Frosting.—One cupful of granulated sugar, ten tablespoonfuls of boiling water and the white of one egg. Boil the sugar and water together without stirring till it hardens when dropped in cold water. Try it as soon as the bubbles become large. Have ready the white of an egg well beaten. Pour the hot sugar on it and beat till stiff enough to ice the cake. Enough for one large loaf.

Orange Frosting.—Beat the white of an egg and add gradually one cupful of pulverized sugar. Beat till stiff and then stir in the juice of one large orange.

Cocoanut Frosting.—Same as orange frosting, substituting three tablespoonfuls of grated cocoanut in place of the orange juice. The white of an egg and one cup of sugar, with any flavoring you may desire, will make enough frosting for one loaf.

Water Icing.—To two tablespoonfuls of boiling water add enough confectioner's sugar to make thick enough to spread. Any flavor.

Chocolate Frosting. — Melt two squares of chocolate and add three-quarters of a cupful of sugar and three tablespoonfuls of milk. Cook in double boiler till smooth. Add the yolk of one egg and let cook one minute. Spread immediately.

Opera Caramel Frosting.—Cook in a double boiler one and one-half cupfuls of brown sugar, three-quarters of a cupful of thin cream and one-half tablespoonful of butter. When a ball is formed by dropping mixture in cold water remove from the fire. Beat until ready to spread.

Exercises For Children.

Exercise is absolutely necessary for children. Without it is impossible to keep the little one's muscles and organs in a sound and healthy condition.

Outdoor games are really the best form of exercise, as the children's interest is held, while their muscles are being used, but brisk walks are good too. But let them also do a few simple calisthenics to strengthen the chest, as games do not provide for this.

Simply stretching the arms out in front and then slowly moving them from front to back and back again and then above the head and down to the sides a few times is quite enough. Teach them to breathe deeply at the same time.

A dog which upset a beehive at Ashburnham, Essex, was attacked by bees and stung to death.

Laying Out a Garden.

In the new garden the making of a walk is as much a matter of study and care as the sidewalk in front of the house. There is nothing so good for this purpose as concrete, but where the expense of that ideal material is too great there can be substituted brick, flagstone, cobbles, pebbles or limestone screenings, says the Delineator for March. The walk should be the only formal stiff feature about the well planned home garden, and time, with the growth of the foliage along its sides, will cure that to a great extent.

The walk should "lead from somewhere to something." It should have a purpose, which is primarily to give access to the garden, but if there are any landscape features in the garden, as there should be, it should become a portion of their motif. If there is a pergola, arch, arbor, garden house or garden seat the access thereto should be by the main walk and not by a lateral path. This presupposes a garden of considerable extent, as these features would have no place in a tiny one; but, lacking these, there must still be something to which the walk leads. It should not end against a wall, fence or the side of a building, but if it approach them should be continued along them to end definitely somewhere, as a door to a building or a gate in a wall, fence or hedge. This marks the real difference between the walk and the path. The latter may lead anywhere and end nowhere. It may lead into and stop at a clump of bushes and may wind and turn at convenience.

Housemaids' Caps.

Nothing makes for neatness of appearance in the housemaid's attire like a fresh, immaculate cap. With her black gown and frilly apron the little headpiece harmonizes beautifully. There is to be found in the shops a new cap that is very attractive. It is not unlike the net and lace jabots that three seasons ago were so popular. Then for morning wear or less dressy effects there is an Alsatian bow composed of lawn with buttonholed edges. This is a very practical model and launders perfectly. A tiny black ribbon rosette in the center of the bow is an addition from a modish standpoint.

TONIC TREATMENT FOR INDIGESTION

The Process of Digestion is Controlled by the Blood and Nerves

If you have indigestion and you begin a course of treatment to make your stomach stronger, you are on the right track for a real cure. You can never cure yourself by eating predigested foods, or by taking purgative medicines. The stomach is not doing its work under these treatments, and there can be no real cure until the stomach is strong enough to digest all the food necessary to maintain the body in normal condidate in normal health. The great aim of the tonic treatment for indigestion in all forms is to strengthen the stomach to a point where all foods eaten will digest easily and nourish the body. A tonic that will strengthen the stomach is what is needed, as the process of digestion is controlled by the blood and nerves. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are an ideal tonic. They actually make new, rich blood, and thus bring strength and tone to the stomach. This has been proved over and over again, and thousands of grateful people have not hesitated to say so. Here is an instance:—Miss Eva Tocher, Balmoral, Man., says:—"I am writing this letter on behalf of my mother, who wishes you to know how much Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have done for her. For several years she has been greatly troubled with indigestion and notwithstanding the medicine she was taking the trouble was growing worse. Every meal was dreaded, and left behind it a feeling of nausea and severe pains. As this continued she began to lose strength and energy, and was hardly able to do any housework. Acting on the advice of a friend she began to take Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and soon began to feel better. She continued taking the Pills until she had used ten boxes, when her health was fully restored and she could take any kind of food without the least discomfort. Since that time she has not had the slightest return of the trouble."

Thousands of cured men and women speak from experience of the benefits derived from Dr. Williams' Pink Pills in cases of indigestion, anaeima, rheumatism, general weakness, pains in the back and side, neuralgia St. Vitus dance, and the troubles that afflict women and growing girls. WHERE TO GO FOR A TIME FROM ONE WHO KNOWS

From our own Correspondent.

Havelock, June 17.—Twenty-five miles east of Peterborough and three and ahalf hours' ride from Toronto is situated the village of Havelock, the centre of numerous lakes and rivers, rivalling Ontario's best in picturesque scenery and good fishing. Three miles to the south is the Trent river, already well known to many tourists and campers, while eastward and north of Havelock is a long chain of beautiful lakes connected by small, yet navigable streams, except in a few place where short portages must be made. These lakes and rivers are about the most convenient place for tourists or sportsmen residing from Kingston west to Toronto.

Starting at the first of the north chain, where it enters into Trent River, we proceeded backward, passing through Crow Lake, Crow River, Belmont Lake, North River, Round Lake, Round River, Oak Lake, and continuing back for about forty miles are lakes and rivers too numerous to mention.

Six miles east of Havelock is situated that hamlet called Blairton with the iron mines close by that at one time made it a place of considerable importance. To the north of the village is Crow Lake with its beautiful coves and bays, extending eastward quite a distance, so that its eastern extremity is the summer home of many of the residents of Marmora village. Mrs. Sweeney, wife of the late manager of the Delora mines, during her stay in Marmora, made weekly trips to Crow Lake, for the purpose of sketching and painting pictures of charming spots around the lake, which she supplied to two of the leading papers in London.

Continuing backward, we come to Crow River, a narrow stream broken in places by short rapids. It widens into the lower part of Belmont Lake, a pretty expanse of water with a long coast line, as it has many deep gulfs and long points. It has several islands, but they are not suited for camping purposes, but make the lake a very picturesque spot as they jut up in the bright, sparkling water with their load of foliage. Accommodation can be had at a large boarding house on its banks, or excellent places may be found for pitching a tent on its high and dry shores and supplies may be purchased from nearby farmers. Boats and guides may also be secured at any time of the year. The fishing in this lake has brought forth many a fine bass and some great 'lunge, and likely will for several years to come. In trawling it is best to have a guide as the bottom of the lake is of rock which in many places juts up nearly to the surface, so that the stranger is liable to lose many lines. An excellent place for camping is at the lower end of the lake, where the land is high, and it has the advantage of having the [illegible] Cordova pass each day, [illegible] half a mile. Minnows for fishing may be secured in Crow River, and excursions may be made eastward to Deer River and Deer Lake, where fishing is excellent at all times of the season. High Falls is situated on Deer Bay, and here a portage must be made, or if you leave your boat below the falls, others may be rented from the farmers who reside on the shores of the lake. Four miles east of Belmont Lake are the Cordova mines, very rich in gold, where an interesting half day may be put in, inspecting the old shafts and ore houses.

Continuing north out of Belmont Lake, we pass through North River, a narrow stream, navigable as far up as Burnt dams, where the Havelock Electric Light and Power house is situated. Here is a pretty little Falls where North River plunges downward over a rocky ledge, splashing and spluttering for about 100 yards before peacefully continuing on to Belmont Lake. Above Burnt dams, North River becomes a little larger, making a beautiful stream for pleasure boating. The banks are low, making the growth on both sides abundant, while trees ranging on either bank makes north river a cool, shady place on the warmest summer day.

Round Lake, which we now reach, gets its name from its peculiar shape, being the nearest to being round it is possible for a natural body of water to be. When you are in the centre of the lake, the shores look like one complete circle, so much so that it is difficult to pick out a particular part of the shore from the centre, only far as you can tell by the position of the sun. It has several islands to the north but like those of Belmont Lake are unfit for camping purposes. It has some ideal spots for bathing, where the sandy shores extend in some places for 100 yards outward into the lake. The fishing in this lake is somewhat similar to Belmont Lake, and a plentiful supply can be secured at any time without a guide. Particular amusement is found in fishing for cat fish, which rival speckled trout in flavor and which are easily caught at sundown with what the fishermen call a "bob." Round Lake is very high, and when the wind blows from the direct west it is sometimes pretty rough for its size. It is about five miles north of Havelock and can be reached by a drive from Havelock over a good road. Boats and bait may be secured at the lake, and if you wish, guides and rowers.

FARTHER BACK.

Those seeking a quiet and enjoyable holiday will find Crow, Belmont and Round Lake excellent places for an outing at minimum expense and trouble. Those wishing for a larger variety and abundance of sport, and who have the time to spare should proceed northward via Round River, which discharges its waters into Round Lake, and which is navigible by either canoe or rowboat as far up as the "Narrows," where it is necessary to portage about 50 yards, and continuing on, Bass Bay is reached, where fishing is good at most times of the year.

Oak Lake is an extensive sheet of water, prettily dotted with numerous islands and where bass fishing can be relied on at all times during the open season. It is always best to carry several kinds of bait, for while one day they will bite best at worms, another day they will prefer frog or minnow. The latter is perhaps the most effectual bait in Oak Lake and may easily be procured.

There is a portage of about 3-8 of a mile from Oak to Koshabogamog Lake, but it is easily made by burnt paths through the woods or it may be reached by a 23 mile drive from Havelock, Koshabogamog is as pretty a lake as there is in Ontario and it does not fall behind in good fishing qualities. There are many islands with charming scenery, making fine places to erect a tent. The water in this lake is cool even in the middle of summer, making the fish of a fine firm quality. In the neighborhood are numerous lakes, of which the most important are Blue, Twin, Gull, Eagle, Jack Deer, Sandy and Bottle. These are not often visited as Oak and Kosh present splendid material for the ordinary angler. The best way for those intending to visit the northern lakes is to take along an easily moved camping outfit, so as to be able to change localities whenever desired. Any of the lakes may be reached by a five mile drive from Havelock. The western extremity of Kosh Lake is only a few hundred yards from Stoney Lake.

Three miles directly south of Havelock is Trent River, which has given its name to the great canal which will soon join Georgian Bay and Lake Ontario by one long continuous stretch of water. Here is a small unincorporated village called Trent Bridge, where many campers come to spend an enjoyable summer vacation.

The Trent river flows out of Rice Lake north eastward to the village of Hastings, a distance of nine miles where it has become somewhat reduced in size. Here there is a drop in the river bed, overcome by a lock at that point. continuing on for seven miles, Trent Bridge is reached where the river takes a more easterly route and continues on to Healey Falls, where good fishing and picturesque scenery are found combined. There are some very good places for camping between Rice Lake and Hastings and the number of anglers that visit there annually shows that the fishing along the Trent's course there is good. Below Hastings and as far down as Trent River trawling for 'lunge will give good results and nice size black bass will help along the catch. When going to Trent Bridge via Havelock, it is not necessary to write ahead arranging for rigs, as liverymen are at all the trains and soon after you arrival, you can be on your way to the river. There are several boarding houses at Trent Bridge, and a large number of summer cottages have also been erected at this point. It is on the direct road from Havelock to Campbellford, mail is received daily and the Toronto and Peterborough papers received the next day. Up and down the river there are some excellent spots where a tent may be pitched and boats bait and other needed things may be purchased here.

Below the bridge there are some fine places for still fishing and trawling will bring forth some of the best of the finny [illegible] especially between the hours of four and seven in the morning. Down the river about a mile there is a large expansion to the right where a branch of the river flows around an island. This expansion is called 'Lunge Bay, and here just outside the weed beds, a splendid supply of small 'lunge and bass can be had, as they go there for the minnows which swarm among the weeds.

The grandest spot in the whole majestic river Trent, both in regard to beautiful scene and excellent fishing, is at Healey Falls. There for fully four hundred yards of its course, the river is one seething, foaming mass as it rushes with monstrous speed down its rapids for that length, which is some places turn into decided falls, one of which make a total drop of 37 feet over a rocky ledge. Here nature is seen in all its beauty, as the rising mist glimmers in the sunshine and the falling waters sing loudly nature's song. From the top of the upper falls to the bottom of the lower falls, there is a total drop in the river's level of 73 feet. Down the north side of the river from the bridge there extends a level strip of land which makes an excellent camping spot as it is prettily dotted with many shade trees. On the other side, the rocky bank of the river rises to a majestic height over the water and if it is pure air and summer breezes that you wish, that is the place to go.

Up the river two miles there is an expansion called Mud Lake, which has a plentiful supply of all sizes of 'lunge Here are the weedy coves, the catfish are very numerous and an evening here with the "bob" once in a while, may be profitably spent. There is a large boarding house situated above the bridge at Healey Falls, where accommodation may be had, or boats may be rented at a reasonable rate. Those who pitch a tent here may get supplies of potatoes, milk, and butter from the surrounding farmers who are very obliging in this particular.

But the spot of sports for the prize small mouth black bass are in the fast flowing stream below the falls. Here they are found in all their glory in all sizes. When you consider that the black bass is the gamiest fish for its size in Ontario, you will not wonder that this spot attracts many fishermen each year. Up and down the river around Crow Bay a mile below Healey Falls, the rod may be used to good advantage.

Those coming from Toronto and Peterborough and who make Havelock their headquarters may come in on the noon train and before two o'clock in the afternoon be busy with bass and 'lunge. A half-day may be added to the holiday of those who have only a few days at their disposal by leaving Toronto or Peterborough the night before, arriving in Havelock at one o'clock where good hotel accommodation may be had close at hand. Thus half a day is added by being able to be on the lake or river early in the morning and before the sun goes down you will have all allowed by law.

Easier for Travelers.

Ottawa, June 18.—A new departmental regulation has been devised which will have effect of relieving Canadians returning from Great Britain from having to answer questions asked. Under the new regulations the agent of steamship companies on this side, when selling a ticket to a Canadian, will issue to the purchaser a certificate to the effect that he is a resident of this country. On the return journey all that will be necessary for a Canadian to do is to present this certificate.

Canadian Catholics Overjoyed.

London, June 18.—Rt. Rev. Francis Bourne, Archbishop of Canterbury, has received the following cable from Archbishop Bruchesi of Montreal.

"Canadian Catholics are overjoyed at Premier Asquith's announcement that he is confident the House of Commons will modify the declaration to be taken by King George at his coronation. We hope the Eucharistic Congress, to be held at Montreal, may acknowledge the event."

Wayward Son's Punishment.

Ottawa, June 18.—For stealing a $100 gold watch from his mother, Joseph A. Chevrier will spend the next two years in Kingston penitentiary. His mother said in court yesterday that in eight years he had worked but four months, that all told she had given him $4,000, but that he persisted in loitering around and would not work.

Poisoned by Horse's Breath.

London, Ont., June 18.—Dr. Jos. L. Scott, V.S., one of the best known horsemen in western Ontario, died yesterday morning after three months' illness with blood poisoning in the throat. While attending to a sick horse he inhaled its breath, and infection immediately developed in his throat.

Aeroplane Trip Postponed.

Rochester, N.Y., June 18.—Owing to unavoidable difficulty in getting the proper grade of Oregon spruce for his biplanes, Dr. William Greene, who had intended making the aeroplane trip across Lake Ontario this month, will probably postpone the attempt to early in July.

High Life.

Up to a short time ago it was believed that the highest human habitation was a Buddhist convent in Tibet, where twenty-one monks devote their lives to the adoration of Buddha at an altitude of some 16,000 feet above sea level. It has been established lately, however, that a colony of mine laborers engaged in working tin and bismuth mines on Mount Chorolque, province of Chiches, Bolivia, are living in a settlement more than 17,000 feet above sea level.

A Dying Island.

An island in Puget sound near Vancouver, B. C., about twenty miles in circumference, is apparently dying from old age. Last summer it was observed that every fir and cedar tree on the island was dead. Near the water's edge vegetation seemed withered, and thin vapor hung over the island all day. There is not a living thing on the island. Not even a crow rests upon the topmost branches of the now dead firs.

THE BOOM IN IRELAND.

Industrials In the North Are Making Plenty of Money Just Now.

After a period of severe depression the Irish linen industry is booming like the rubber market. The difficulties of the cotton trade in Lancashire have their compensation in Ulster. It will comfort Manchester's free exchange convictions to know that the falling-off in exports of manufactured cotton is made good by the swelling exports of manufactured linen from Belfast. At all events, the Ulster Free Traders find encouragement in the conditions and the the Ulster Tariff Reformers are not complaining that they are not compelled to enforce their argument by the example of their own industry ruined.

It is not only that the competition of cotton cloth is lessened. In the markets of the world the different kinds of linens manufactured in other countries have fallen out of fashion from various causes, and Irish linens have all the vogue. So, although the home trade is poor, the mills and factories of Belfast, Lisburn, Portadown, Londonderry, and all the industrial towns and villages of Ulster are working at high pressure in the endeavor to make the most of the favorable conditions while they last.

There are Tariff Reformers and Free Traders in the Ulster linen industry. Sometimes there is a division of opinion on the subject among the members of the same firm or the members of the same family. At a cheerful luncheon party in a hospitable country house in Antrim the host was a Free Trader, while his brother was a Tariff Reformer. But both were Unionists. Among the guests were two of the most prominent men in Ulster. One was a Free Trader and the other was a Tariff Reformer. Indeed, they differed in a friendly way upon almost every subject, but both were Unionists.

The great fiscal problem appears to have no more to do with politics in the Belfast region than the Bacon-Shakespeare controversy. Montague and Capulet, if they had lived in Ulster, might have carried on their unrelenting family feud, but being Ulstermen and Protestants both would have been Unionists. Probably they would have fought one another ferociously in the party organization, but once either of them had been selected as the Unionist candidate the other would have voted for him. In Ulster there are Liberals—old-fashioned Liberals and advanced Radicals, as well as Conservatives; but so long as they are Protestants they are all Unionists. Religion is the dividing line in politics still, and land purchase has not operated either in the Catholic church or the Presbyterian chapel.

I was talking with a distinguished Ulsterman of great knowledge and experience, of generous enthusiasms, wide sympathies, and notable achievements in commerce and public life. He was unstinted in his acknowledgment of the good that has been wrought throughout Ireland by the transference of the property in the land to the farmers.

Bell-ringing records have previously all been held by teams of sturdy men, but Miss Lilian A. Wilson, a young lady of only sixteen years of age, has just performed an extraordinary feat, which entitles her to the honor of being the world's champion lady bell-ringer.

The other day she entered the steeple of Gilmorton Church and assisted in "opening" the bells by ringing the first peal. This unique peal numbered 5,040 changes, and meant continual ringing for over three hours, without a moment's pause for food or rest! This is Lilian's third long performance, but every week she rings the royal memorial bells of St. John the Divine, Leicester.

The physical endurance involved in bell-ringing of this character, let alone the necessary skill, is prodigious.

Miss Wilson received her training under the guidance of her father, who, five years ago, conducted the then world's record peal of 17,104 changes, which occupied nearly eleven hours. Heredity may therefore have something to do with this, as other matters.

Harry Lauder's Severest Critic.

The popular Scotch comedian places the greatest reliance upon his wife's judgment in regard to new songs. "I have got books," he says, "heaps of them, of old music. Some of the books are nearly 200 years old. I can play the bagpipes, and the piano too, sufficiently well to try over the songs, and when I am putting words and music together I just have my wife to give me her opinion. She is my critic, and I rely entirely on her judgment. When I try a new song she stands at the back of the stalls to watch me and to listen, and when my turn is over she gives me her opinion. It is always sufficent for me. Even my patter I submit to my wife to criticize. The secret of successful songs? Well, I believe in tunes that the audience can easily hum, for they cannot all sing the words. You get such tunes among the old, old melodies of the people, and I am hunting these up every day."

"Tear 'Em!"

When Mr. Balfour held the Irish Secretaryship in the old days of Coercionists and Land Leaguers, Sir Edward Carson, whose health has been causing some anxiety to his friends, was his right-hand man. And no one was more abused than "Tear 'Em," as Sir Edward was nicknamed for carrying out Mr. Balfour's policy. So bitter indeed were the attacks of the Irish papers that one day a friend asked Sir Edward to take steps to stop them. "Stop them?" replied Sir Edward. "No, certainly not. Attacks like those are the manure on which one's reputation grows." Few people are aware that Sir Edward intended to be an architect at first; but the attractions of the law proved too great, and, oddly enough, his first brief was in a building case.

Think of Last Summer—

You can remember days when the heat inside your kitchen was so great you could hardly bear it. With the right stove you would have made a better hostess. Save your health. Don't put up with the drudgery of a coal range. You can have a clean, cool, pleasant kitchen. The does away with all drudgery of cooking. Why should you be a slave to a coal range when you can have an Oil Cook-Stove that is cheaper than coal, cleaner than coal, doesn't "smell," doesn't smoke, lights instantly, can be put out instantly, leaves no ashes, and doesn't heat the kitchen. With one of these stoves you can boil, bake or roast the most elaborate dinner. You can change from a slow to a quick fire, or the other way about, by simply turning a wick. Apply a match, and instantly the heat from an intense blue flame shoots upward through the turquoise-blue enamel chimneys to the bottom of pot, kettle or oven—but nowhere else. The stove has every convenience that can be thought of: Cabinet Top with shelf for keeping food and dishes hot, drop shelves to hold coffee or teapots, towel rack; in fact every convenience possible.

Cautionary Note: Be sure you get this stove—see that the name-plate reads "New Perfection."

Made with 1, 2 and 3 burners; the 2 and 3-burner stoves can be had with or without Cabinet.

THE DAY'S DROWNINGS; EIGHT TO WATERY GRAVES

St. Catharines Man Commits Suicide at Niagara Falls—Sailor Drowned in Welland Canal—Bank Clerk Perishes at North Bay.

Niagara Falls, Ont., June 20.—Leaping from the lower steel arch bridge shortly before one o'clock yesterday morning, Frank Quinn, a 25-year-old St. Catharines man, committed suicide. Half a score of people saw the man climb the rail of the bridge and take the fatal plunge into the river. A sharp outlook was kept on the whirlpool all day, but nothing was seen of the body.

With two companions Quinn was returning from a night spent over the river on his way home to St. Catherines. A short distance from the American end of the bridge he attempted to climb the railing, telling his companions that he was going to end his life. They managed to drag him back to the footpath and the three resumed their journey across the bridge.

Another attempt was made by Quinn to get over the railing when the party reached the middle of the bridge. He was again prevented carrying out his desire to end his life, and another start was made for the Canadian shore. One of his companions went ahead and summoned the police, who arrived just after Quinn went to his death. It was when the two men were within several hundred feet of this end of the bridge that Quinn succeeded in throwing off the clutch of his companion and climbed over the rail. As the man with him wrestled and strained every nerve in his body to prevent him going over the bridge, Quinn pleaded to be allowed to end his life, declaring that he preferred death to a life of agony. He dropped into the water, while George Patterson and Thomas McGrait of this city, who were returning home, rushed to the assistance of the man who was holding the suicide.

For about three years Quinn has suffered from an incurable disease, and for some days has been melancholy. Just before his leap to death he had been drinking. His father is an insurance man in St. Catharines.

Drowned In Welland Canal.

St. Catharines, June 20.—Frank Burtch, aged 16, employed as deckhand on the Montreal Transportation Company's steamer Bothnia, was drowned at lock 4, New Welland Canal, yesterday afternoon.

Burtch, with two companions, was swimming in the canal when he was suddenly seized with cramps. His companions went to his assistance, and but for his struggles, would have succeeded in rescuing him.

Assistant Secretary Henry and a force of canal employes dragged the canal at this point, and succeeded in bringing the body to the surface.

The body has not been recovered.

On his return, he went down, and when help was secured and the body found life was extinct.

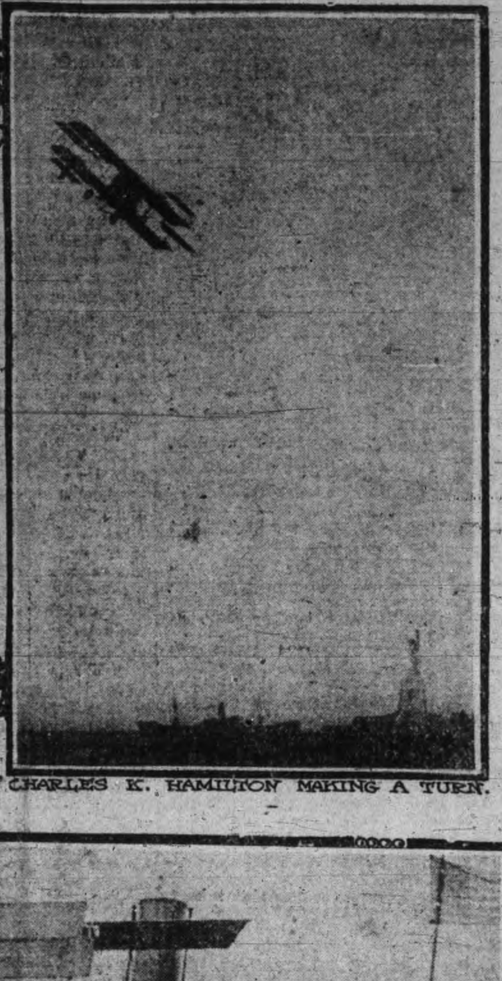
GLENN H. CURTISS AND CHARLES K. HAMILTON.



CHARLES K. HAMILTON MAKING A TURN.

LIFTING HAMILTON'S AEROPLANE FROM THE BARGE TO THE LANDING AT GOVERNOR'S ISLAND.

For one hour six minutes and fifteen seconds Charles K. Hamilton drove a Curtiss aeroplane through the murky clouds over New York Harbor recently, giving the most remarkable demonstration of aerial skill ever seen in the Western Hemisphere.

He left Governor's Island at two minutes of seven p.m. and landed at six minutes of eight p.m.

Everything that a mighty fish-hawk might do Mr. Hamilton did with the flying machine. The little group of spectators on Governor's Island and the crowds on the ferry boats and Battery wall gazed in amazement. To the novices it was akin to the miraculous; to experts and other aeronauts it was scarcely less astonishing.

At altitudes varying from fifteen feet to fifteen hundred he darted and swooped over the island and the water, leaping down from the dizzy heights at ferry boats, circling about little tugboats, darting away again into the heavy clouds and five seconds later whizzing down over the heads of the spectators on the parade grounds.

NEW YORK GIVES MIGHTY HUNTER A GREAT OVATION

New York, June 20.—Mr. Roosevelt is home, the happiest man alive. His reception in the gateway of his country went straight to his heart. He laughed like a boy. He wept unashamed.

Nothing in all his career—he said it with clinched jaws and a bang of his fist—so affected him as the fervency of the greeting he got on land and water Saturday. New York just reached out, gripped him by the hand, slapped him on the back and said, "Teddy, you're mighty welcome home!"

From his year and a quarter of hunting and sightseeing and speech-making he returned with no politics to declare. Afloat and ashore standpatters and insurgents coveted his smile, plucked at his sleeve and prayed for a declaration. He laughed them aside. He was in no mood, he told them all, for political discussion. The future? Well—and then he was dancing away, fiercely, feverishly intent on missing nothing of the spectacle in his honor.

Theodore Roosevelt was no man's critic Saturday. His delight embraced them all. For the strenuous, the mollycoddles, they of the soft body and the hard face, the big and little in the world's estimation, he had the same smile—and every degree of citizen cheered with the same enthusiasm. He said once that he felt like reaching out and giving the whole United States a hug. There you have him all day long.

It is the simple truth that no American was ever so mightily acclaimed as ex-President Roosevelt Saturday, says The Sun yesterday, describing the event. Within the eight hours of his stay in New York boundaries he got every mark of honor that time and his own comfort permitted. Forts and warships roared the Presidential salute of twenty-one guns and more than a million people lined the watersides and the streets and cheered him every foot of his way.

"One thing I want now is privacy," he said to the reporters. "I want to close up like a native oyster. I will go to New York on Monday to attend my boy's wedding, and I will go to the city on Wednesday to see to my editorial duties. I hope you representatives of the press will not come up here to Sagamore Hill, because I have nothing to say."

But it was remembered that his first words down the bay to the chief of his official welcomers were that his holiday was over and he was glad to be home — ready again to "put his shoulder to the wheel." And in his speech at the Battery he said: "And I am ready and eager to do my part so far as I am able in helping to solve problems which must be solved if we of this the greatest democratic republic are to see its destinies rise to the high level of our hopes and its opportunities."

Mr. Roosevelt was asked if he had any statement whatever to make concerning political or other matters in which the public might be interested. He said he hadn't. He didn't expect to have anything of importance to say for some time. Lloyd C. Griscom stepped up to him and suggested that he make a statement.

"I'm going to make a few public statements as I can," said Mr. Roosevelt. "I may take advantage of my momentary notoriety to relieve my mind of certain non-contentious matters. I think I may be something like the man to whom it was said, 'All we want from you is silence, and blame little of that.'"

He swept New York with an eager eye, standing alone on the bridge of the Androscoggin. The piers, crowded and noisy, gave him a greeting and he swung his silk hat to Jersey and Manhattan. The deep and vibrant whistles saluted him and he laughed and waved his hand at the crowding steamboats.

The final scene of his welcome was as dramatic as any lover of sensations may hope for. The Rough Riders were drawn up facing down Fifth avenue and the first thing he did was to stride from horse to horse and shake hands with every rider of them. The Spanish War veterans of the whole country presented to him an album of complimentary resolutions, in acceptance of which Mr. Roosevelt spoke a dozen earnest words. It was all over in a whiff and at 1.35 p.m. he was speeding down Fifth avenue in a motor-car on his way to lunch at 433 Fifth avenue, the home of Mrs. H. A. Alexander, the mother of his son Theodore's fiance.

He went to Long Island City for his train in a furious storm of wind and rain, and the flags that had been so gay were nothing but sodden rags. But his luck as the city said, had held. The fogs had rolled away for him. The sun had brightened his reception. For all of the celebration that counted there had been perfect weather.

Terrific Storm Follows Arrival.

New York, June 20.—On the heels of the reception to Theodore Roosevelt yesterday came the deluge. Two hours after the parade that escorted him up Fifth avenue had disbanded, the whole metropolitan district was swept by the most violent downpour in months. In twenty minutes 50 of an inch of rain fell, while the wind at times attained a velocity of 58 miles an hour.

It caused the deaths of 12 people, injured many others, tied up traffic all over the city, and throughout the suburbs for several hours, endangered the lives of many people out on the waters for a day's excursion, demolished numberless flag poles, church steeples and weak buildings, and thoroughly washed out the land. Twelve are all that are known to be dead.

For an hour and a half the storm continued, causing great damage.

The torrents put a sudden end to ball games at the Polo grounds and in Brooklyn, and gave the thousands of spectators a drenching. Racegoers at Sheepshead were nearly thrown into a panic when they saw a bolt of lightning demolish the jockey's board and plow a furrow 100 feet long through the earth.

SUFFRAGETTES HAVE BIG TIME

London, June 20.—Weary of inactivity, the militant suffragettes reopened their campaign Saturday evening with a musical pageant. Ten thousand women, with banners flying, and forty bands, marched in procession for miles through the streets from Charing Cross to Albert Hall. There a great meeting was held in support of the movement, and it was opened with the singing of the "Marsellaise."

The two-mile column was wonderfully representative of all classes. A striking feature was a contingent of 600 women, who had undergone imprisonment for the cause, each bearing a silver wand tipped with a big broad-arrow — the insignia of the prison.

Mrs. Drummond was chief marshal of the procession. She was constantly greeted with cheers as she cantered up and down the line of march astride a charger, followed by two aides, the Hon. Mrs. Haverfield and Miss Vera Halme, both of whom rode astride.

The meeting at Albert Hall was presided over by Mrs. Pankhurst and was most enthusiastic. Mrs. Pankhurst, Frederick Pethik Lawrence, joint editor of Votes for Women, and Earl Lytton were among the speakers. The leaders of the movement promise the Government a lively time from this on, unless the Government quickly concedes their demands.

QUEEN'S OWN BOYS GATHER

Toronto, June 20.—Something unique in military records is the celebration of the jubilee of the Second Regiment, Queen's Own Rifles of Canada, long spoken of as Toronto's "crack corps," that 2,000 "old boy" wearers of the rifle green should be mustered together, headed by a band of former members, as a record to be proud of, when the number includes many who have risen to high rank in other regiments, it is all the more a matter for glory. Gen. Otter, chief Canadian soldier, who commanded the Queen's Own in the olden days, could not have been present, for yesterday's church parade.

Saturday's garden party at the exhibition grounds was a most auspicious beginning for the week's program, while the smoking concert at the armories in the evening provided amusement for a big crowd and afforded opportunity for a testimonial presentation to Col. Sir Henry Pellatt from officers in the garrison formerly connected with the Queen's Own.

THE FIRST PASSENGER AIRSHIP

Friedrichshaven, Germany, June 20.—The maiden voyage of the first German passenger airship, the Deutschland, is announced for June 22. The course will be from Friedrichshaven to Stuttgart, Mannheim, Cologne and Dusseldorf.

The Deutschland was built after the Zeppelin model jointly for the Hamburg-American Steamship Co., and the German Airship Stock Co.

The epoch-making aerial excursions will be carried out on a luxurious scale. The cabin of the Deutschland is of mahogany, built after the style of a sleeping-car. It is carpeted and inland with mother of pearl. Large windows provide an outlook on both sides. It is situated between the gondolas. A restaurant will supply cold meats, coffee, tea and wine.

The dimensions of the vessel are: Length 485 feet, width 46 feet. Its capacity is 24,852 cubic yards of gas, and it will carry three motors, totally 330 horsepower, with a speed of 35 miles an hour. The limit of the voyage is fixed at 700 miles. The lifting capacity of the craft is 44,000 pounds, of which 11,000 will cover crew, passengers and freight.

The first trips are fully booked, the fare varying from $25 to $50.

MISSING TORONTO GIRL IS FOUND

Boston, June 20.—Hannah Christensen, the 16-year-old girl who was thought to have been a suicide, on account of letters which she left bearing that information, returned to her home in Allston Saturday morning.

To Mr. Alex. Anderson, at whose home the girl has been living, she said: "I was stopping with relatives. Tell my mother in Toronto that I am well. I did not try to commit suicide and I don't know why I wrote the letters."

The girl was later in the afternoon placed in the custody of the police, who are investigating the truth of her story. At a late hour last night they had been unsuccessful in their attempts to get the girl to talk about herself. It is likely that she will be sent to her mother in Toronto, if the latter wishes. She seemed cheerful and treated her disappearance lightly.

ADVERTISE IN THE REVIEW.

PREMIERS AT CORONATION

New York, June 20.—The London correspondent of The Tribune says:—King George is credited with a natural ambition to strike out in a new line for himself, and be known as a great imperialist, as his father won recognition as diplomatist and peacemaker. His journeys to India and the groups of independent colonies have made him the champion of the interests of Great Britain, and he is likely to make his reign conspicuous by comprehensive policies for promoting closer relations between the mother country and the overseas dominion.

It is already intimated that the coronation will be attended by the Colonial Premiers, and that an important imperial conference will be held immediately afterward. Preferential tariffs will be debated if the Unionists are in power, and a larger measure of diplomatic representation for the colonies in London will be proposed if the Liberals are still in office.

THE EMPEROR OPERATED ON

Berlin, June 20.—Prof. Bier, late on Saturday afternoon used a knife on the Emperor's knee. According to the usually well-informed Lokal Anzeiger, the inflammation proved of a similar character to that on the wrist three weeks ago. It took the form of a furunicle, containing pus.

The operation, which consisted simply of lancing the abscess, was considered slight, and His Majesty was able later to participate in the family dinner at the palace. The first bandage was renewed at night.

The Emperor suffers no pain to speak of, and is very cheerful. A complete recovery is expected in a few days, unless some unanticipated complication should set in. A semi-official note, issued last evening, makes no mention of an operation, but says: "The knee affection of the Emperor is progressing favorably."

Fainted When Sentenced.

Woodstock, June 20.—John Whyte, a farmer of Blandford, who was tried last week at the County Court sessions, was sentenced Saturday to two years in Kingston Penitentiary. Whyte is 60 years of age, and fainted when he received his sentence.

CROSSING DISASTER

Mr. Thomas Hare, His Wife and Sister-in-Law Were Killed by Express.

St. Thomas, June 20.—A sad accident occurred yesterday morning at the Wabash level crossing in Aylmer, resulting in the death of three people, Mr. Thomas F. Hare and his wife, Hannah M., and her sister, Miss Annie E. Scott of Ottawa.

It transpired that all three had been to church and were driving home to Mr. Hare's farm, about a mile and a quarter north of the town, when No. 3 Wabash express dashed into them as they attempted to cross the track. Mr. and Mrs. Hare were killed instantly and Miss Scott died three hours later from injuries sustained.

About two hundred yards east of the crossing is a curve and none of the occupants of the buggy could see the train. Several people nearby, however, shouted to them that the train was coming, but they tried to cross ahead of it, with the painful result that all three lost their lives. They were each about seventy years of age, and were well known and highly respected in the district.

Miss Scott was paying a visit to her sister, and was to return shortly to Ottawa, where she lived with her brother, Dr. Scott. At the time of the accident the train was traveling at a speed of forty miles an hour and when it dashed into the buggy the occupants were thrown a distance of about 120 feet.

An inquest was opened Saturday afternoon by Dr. Sinclair of Aylmer and Acting County Attorney Maxwell, and after the jury viewed the bodies it was adjourned for a week.

They will lunch at the Clifton Hotel at one o'clock. The picnic will be opened by a massed band concert at 1.30 o'clock. The speeches will begin an hour later.

A banquet will be held at the Clifton Hotel in the evening.

BROUGHT TORONTO GIRL TO BUFFALO

Buffalo, June 20.—On a charge of robbery and assault, Carlo Marino, 30 years old, whose home is in New York City, was arrested Saturday night by Detective Sergeants O'Grady and Elsaesser. With Marino when he was arrested was a young woman whose name is Edith Walters. She is 22 years old. Marino, it is alleged, brought the young woman here from Toronto.

On Feb. 7 last, it is alleged that Marino and another man assaulted and robbed an Italian tailor of $300 in the street. The tailor was in a hospital for several weeks.

The police of New York and of Canada have been hunting for Marino since the robbery. Another charge, that of importing a young woman into this country from Canada, the police say, is to be made against the man by the Federal authorities. The girl, who was arrested with Marino, is being detained until the police look up her record.

Three passengers were killed and twenty-five injured.

THE POLICE RAIDED PAPER POKER GAME

Winnipeg, June 20.—A successful police raid was made Saturday evening by Inspector Robertson when he entered The Tribune building and raided a room in which he discovered several employes of the paper playing poker.

"You had better cash in," said the inspector, and the players then handed their chips to a man named Orris, and he paid their equivalent, establishing the case for the police. It is understand that they will all plead guilty.

Kingston, June 20.—Gen. French yesterday inspected the Barriefield camp of volunteers. At 8.30 the troops were marched to Barriefield Hill. The manoeuvre was very successful. From here the troops marched to Barriefield camp parade ground.

After the marchpast Gen. French made a short address to the senior officers. He said that the officers must pay special attention to the discipline of the soldiers, for as these soldiers learn to behave now, so they will behave in time of war. He also emphasized the need for explaining the intricate parts of a rifle, how it is made and the advantages of it over others of its class. Then he concluded his remarks by congratulating the officers on the efficiency of the troops, considering the short time the majority have been in training.

PAID UP WHEN DETECTED

The Public Accounts Committee of the New Brunswick Legislature a while ago discovered a few things about Mr. Pugsley's handling of public money when he was in power in his province. When investigation was made the Minister's telegraph bill was found to stand as follows:

1906—Western Union, $70.10; C.P.R. Telegraph Company, $135—$205.65, or more than $1,600 for the three years. When these bills were being investigated—on March 19th, 1907—Mr. Pugsley was called upon for an explanation. He said that he had gone through the accounts himself, had separated the messages which were of a private nature, and had made a refund to the Treasury."

DROWNED

Two women were drowned in Toronto Bay on Saturday. Had they been swimmers they would have been living to-day. The two men accompanying them were saved. These young women were natives of Horning's Mills, a spot near Guelph, and had ample chance to learn. The expert swimmer is rare, but the ability to swim a few strokes is a possession that every man and woman should call their own. Rescue is usually close at hand these days, and if one can only manage to keep afloat that is all that is necessary. A simple paddling motion by the hands, and a quick marking of time by the feet will keep one's lips and nose above the water. The tendency is to scream when one falls in, and this scream is shut off by immersion and the lungs are filled. When one falls in the water usually the first thing is the disappearing and the immediately coming up, but if the struggler would cease a wild waving of hands, and paddle with hands and feet, there would be less deaths by drowning than to-day.

The time submerged to the excited one seems an age, whereas it is only a very few seconds.

WHY IS IT?

Last night in one of Peterborough's most important churches, the soloist offered her selection with splendid power, purity of tone and warmth of feeling, but one hymn known the world around was sung to a tune that robbed it of its memories. Hymns that live are hymns into which the tune has entered as the blood into the body. Change the tune and the hymn for most of us is dead.

Who would know Home, Sweet Home to whom would it bring up a hallowed past if not sung to that air so familiar to the Anglo-Saxon race?

IS THIS HIS HOUR?

Theodore Roosevelt is now where he belongs and where he is much needed. He [illegible] returned to a land of millionaires, where the rich are getting richer and poverty is increasing.

Talk of Russia, where now and then the Cossacks lash and shoot a score, a hundred or perhaps a thousand defenceless people. MILLIONS ARE DAILY LASHED BY THE TRUSTS, HEADED BY A FEW MEN WHO CONTROL THE FINANCES AND GREAT INDUSTRIES AND RAILROADS OF THE UNITED STATES. The poor man has little redress.

The political power is in the hands of the few and mighty.

The necessities of life are held by them. The newspapers of the land controlled by them not only defend, but laud their actions.

The people are restless and looking for help, and in this hour Roosevelt looms large on the horizon.

They are looking for some Napoleon to organize the host to right the wrongs under which the great Republic is suffering.

It is to be hoped that Roosevelt can fill the gap, and that his spectacular career of the past few months may produce something for the benefit of the nation of which he is in this hour proclaimed the first citizen.

Years ago Lincoln freed the slaves, who were slaves because their skin was dark and they happened to be born that way. To-day there are more slaves in the United States than ever. Just because they are poor and were born that way.

There was a great civil war to free the great army of slaves, the men, women and children who were black.

In the interests of humanity it is to be hoped that freedom will be obtained by evolution rather than by revolution, and that it will be a battle of ballots instead of bullets.

Will Theodore Roosevelt be the man to free this country of slavery, this so-called land of the free?

Will he, or will he cease being a domineering feature of the United States and go, not into the jungles of Africa, but of oblivion?

This seems to be Theodore Roosevelt's psychological hour, when he can do more than talk and appear as the most photographed man of recent years.

THIS IS HORRIBLE

A letter appeared in the Review addressed to the sporting editor in favor of allowing Johnson and Jeffries to fight. The argument seems fairly reasonable. The writer says these men fight in the open. In England, in the National Sporting Club fights take place very often when lords and other gentlemen of high degree, in evening dress, turn out to see them. The Governor of California declares that he will not allow the fistic battle to be pulled off in his state.

The spectacle of two well trained men standing with gloves on, shaking hands, and then proceeding to punch each other, may appear shocking and be declared illegal, but what is a rugby football match, as it is often carried on, but a legalized fight till the whistle blows?

In the prize ring the men wear gloves and tights and light shoes. On the gridiron they wear armor, and pads for the ears and nose. Players are frequently knocked out, collar bones are broken, skulls fractured and ankles sprained. There is hacking and punching and mauling galore.

Tender slips of girls go, matrons go, the dude attends and so does the solid business man.

Blood often flows from the injuries, and loud is the roar of applause when the whistle blows and the disabled warrior is ready to commence again. The annual deaths from rugby are startling, but THIS IS SPORT.

Many good clergymen attend, and, indeed, many a clergyman was a better fighter on the football field than he is in the great fight against the devil in later years.

Thousands attend lacrosse matches. "Hit him," "Slug him," "dirty, rotten, rotten." Then the whistle blows and the bleeding head is tied up and the game goes on.

In the Jeffries-Johnson contest two men will fight. They will not kick, bite or hack. They will not hit below the belt. Neither will a blow be struck unless the opponent is standing on his feet. Their noses may bleed, the flesh about their eyes may swell, and one must bite the dust, a fallen gladiator, but THIS IS HORRIBLE.

THE POINT OF VIEW

WOMAN, LOVELY WOMAN.

St. Catharines Journal.

A woman wants to race in an aeroplane. She is sure she can beat some of the others in the New York-Chicago flight. And why not? Women who are brave enough to wear some of the new creations that come out are brave enough to attempt just such an adventure.

Niagara yesterday had two murders, a dramatic suicide, a carnival, a review by General French, a rescue of a tight-rope performer from his wire, above the falls, a fire in which fifteen people were burned, and an attempted jail escape. Pretty good, that, for a town sometimes referred to as slow.

Took Carbolic Acid.

London, Ont., June 20.—William Ridley, a machinist, aged 69, was found dead yesterday morning in a Park avenue boarding-house. A post-mortem showed that death resulted from carbolic acid poisoning, and was apparently a case of suicide. Ridley had quarrelled with his wife a number of times, and threatened on several occasions to leave her. He had packed his suit case as if for a journey. Coroner Dr. McLaren decided to hold no inquest. The house was the scene of another suicide a few years ago.

Five Years of Blood in Russia.

The Prawo, a weekly publication devoted to matters of law in Russia, in an article on "The Dealth Penalty In Russia In Five Years" says that in that period 6,288 death sentences were pronounced by Russian judges and 2,855 of these were carried into execution. "This is an average of 104 death sentences and forty-eight executions for every month. But there were some months in which the number ran up to 220. January, 1908, was the richest in executions, there having been as many as nineteen in one day. The five years in question remind one strongly of the most bloody period of the middle ages, and the history of Russia can show only a few periods in which the judicial killing of human beings was greater."

REV. BAGSTER'S PRAYER.

A Division of Labor.

Bobby had been unusually quiet for several hours, so quiet indeed that his mother began to worry over the great quantities of stillness that came from the room in which he was sitting. Finally, unable to stand the strain any longer, she rose up from her work and went into the nursery.

"What are you doing, Bobby?" she said as she discovered the little chap curled up in a chair with a very solemn expression on his face.

"Thinkin' and wishin'," replied Bobby.

"What about, dear?" asked his mother.

"I was thinkin' how nice it would be if I was twins," he answered. "Then the other one could do the studyin' at school and I could stay home and play, and then when I did something naughty, why, you could spank him. When I was sick he could take the castor oil, and"—

"And when you had some candy—what then?" asked his mother.

"Oh, I'd eat it," said Bobby. "It wouldn't do for me to let him get sick."—Judge's Library.

A Prodigy.

"So you think your boy is a prodigy? But every man thinks his own son is the most wonderful being that ever breathed."

"I tell you this youngster is remarkable, no matter how you may sneer. I've seen him do a thing that I don't suppose any other boy of his age could possibly do."

"What's his specialty—mathematics?"

"Mathematics! I should say not! He hasn't any more head for figures than I have, and learning the multiplication table was the hardest work I ever did in my life."

"In what branch of science does he seem to be particularly interested?"

"He isn't interested in science at all. But the other day a friend of mine who has a big automobile left the machine standing in front of my house for more than half an hour, and, although the boy was playing around outside all the time, he did not once climb into the automobile or even toot the horn."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Clinging to a Pleasure.

"Why don't you buy a home instead of paying rent?"

"I'm tempted to," replied Mr. Flatson, "but I'm having too good a time riding around with real estate men looking at suburban property."—Washington Star.

The Mystery of The Yellow Room

By GASTON LEROUX

COPYRIGHT, 1908, BY BRENTANO'S

"It's answering," he said at length. "I must kill it. It is too wicked, but it's the Bete du Bon Dieu, and every night it goes to pray on the tomb of St. Genevieve, and nobody dares to touch her for fear that Mother Angenoux should cast an evil spell on them."

"How big is the Bete du Bon Dieu?"

"Nearly as big as a small retriever—a monster, I tell you. Ah, I have asked myself more than once whether it was not she that took our poor mademoiselle by the throat with her claws. But the Bete du Bon Dieu does not wear hobnailed boots, nor fire revolvers, nor has she a hand like that!" exclaimed Daddy Jacques, again pointing out to us the red mark on the wall. "Besides, we should have seen her as well as we would have seen a man."

"Evidently," I said. "Before we had seen this yellow room I had also asked myself whether the cat of Mother Angenoux"—

"You also!" cried Rouletabille.

"Didn't you?" I asked.

"Not for a moment. After reading the article in the Matin I knew that a cat had nothing to do with the matter. But I swear now that a frightful tragedy has been enacted here. You say nothing about the Basque cap or the handkerchief found here, Daddy Jacques."

"Of course the magistrate has taken them," the old man answered hesitatingly.

"I haven't seen either the handkerchief or the cap, yet I can tell you how they are made," the reporter said to him gravely.

"Oh, you are very clever," said Daddy Jacques, coughing and embarrassed.

"The handkerchief is a large one, blue with red stripes, and the cap is an old Basque cap, like the one you are wearing now."

"You are a wizard!" said Daddy Jacques, trying to laugh and not quite succeeding. "How do you know that the handkerchief is blue with red stripes?"

"Because if it had not been blue with red stripes it would not have been found at all."

Without giving any further attention to Daddy Jacques my friend took a piece of paper from his pocket and, taking out a pair of scissors, bent over the footprints. Placing the paper over one of them, he began to cut. In a short time he had made a perfect pattern, which he handed to me, begging me not to lose it.

He then returned to the window and, pointing to the figure of Frederic Larsan, who had not quitted the side of the lake, asked Daddy Jacques whether the detective had, like himself, been working in the yellow room.

"No," replied Robert Darzac, who since Rouletabille had handed him the piece of scorched paper had not uttered a word. "He pretends that he does not need to examine the yellow room. He says that the murderer made his escape from it in quite a natural way and that he will this evening explain how he did it."

As he listened to what M. Darzac had to say Rouletabille turned pale.

"Has Frederic Larsan found out the truth, which I can only guess at?" he murmured. "He is very clever—very clever—and I admire him. Yet I have discovered many things."

"Moral or material?" I asked.

"Several moral, one material. This, for example."

And rapidly he drew from his waistcoat pocket a piece of paper in which he had placed a light colored hair from a woman's head.

CHAPTER VIII.

The Examining Magistrate Questions Mlle. Stangerson.

TWO minutes later, as Rouletabille was bending over the footprints discovered in the park under the window of the vestibule, a man, evidently a servant at the chateau, came toward us rapidly and called out to M. Darzac, then coming out of the pavilion:

"M. Robert, the magistrate, you know, is questioning mademoiselle."

M. Darzac uttered a muttered excuse to us and set off running toward the chateau, the man running after him.

"We must know," said my friend. "Let's go to the chateau." And he drew me with him. But at the chateau a gendarme placed in the vestibule denied us admission up the staircase of the first floor. We were obliged to wait downstairs.

The family doctor, finding that Mlle. Stangerson was much better, but fearing a relapse which would no longer permit of her being questioned, had thought it his duty to inform the examining magistrate of this, who decided to proceed immediately with a brief examination. At this examination the registrar, M. Stangerson and the doctor were present. Later I obtained the text of the report of the examination, and I give it here in all its legal dryness:

"Question. Are you able, mademoiselle, without too much fatiguing yourself, to give some necessary details of the frightful attack of which you have been the victim? Answer. I feel much better, monsieur, and I will tell you all I know. When I entered my chamber I did not notice anything unusual there.

"Q. What did you do on that day? I want you to be as minute and precise as possible. I wish to know all you did that day if it is not asking too much of you. A. I rose late, at 10 o'clock, for my father and I had returned home late on the night previously, having been to dinner at the reception given by the president of the republic in honor of the Academy of Science of Philadelphia. When I left my chamber at half past 10 my father was already at work in the laboratory. We worked together till midday. We then took half an hour's walk in the park, as we were accustomed to do, before breakfasting at the chateau. After breakfast we took another walk for half an hour and then returned to the laboratory. There we found my chambermaid, who had come to set my room in order. I went into the yellow room to give her some slight orders, and she directly afterward left the pavilion, and I resumed my work with my father. At 5 o'clock we again went for a walk in the park and afterward had tea.

"Q. Before leaving the pavilion at 5 o'clock did you go into your chamber? A. No, monsieur. My father went into it, at my request, to bring me my hat.

"Q. And he found nothing suspicious there. A. Evidently no, monsieur.

"Q. It is, then, almost certain that the murderer was not yet concealed under the bed. When you went out was the door of the room locked? A. No; there was no reason for locking it.

"Q. You were absent from the pavilion some length of time, M. Stangerson and you? A. About an hour.

"Q. It was during that hour, no doubt, that the murderer got into the pavilion. But how? Nobody knows. Footmarks have been found in the park leading away from the window of the vestibule, but none has been found going foward it. Did you notice whether the vestibule window was open when you went out? A. I don't remember.

"M. Stangerson—It was closed.

"Q. And when you returned?

"Mlle. Stangerson—I did not notice.

"M. Stangerson—It was still closed. I remember remarking aloud, 'Daddy Jacques must surely have opened it while we were away.'

"Q. Strange! Do you recollect, M. Stangerson, if during your absence and before going out he had opened it? You returned to the laboratory at 6 o'clock and resumed work?

"Mlle. Stangerson—Yes, monsieur.

"Q. And you did not leave the laboratory from that hour up to the moment when you entered your chamber?

"M. Stangerson—Neither my daughter nor I, monsieur. We were engaged on work that was pressing, and we lost not a moment, neglecting everything else on that account.

"Q. Did you dine in the laboratory? A. For that reason.

"Q. Are you accustomed to dine in the laboratory? A. We rarely dine there.

"Q. Could the murderer have known that you would dine there that evening?

"M. Stangerson—Good heavens! I think not. It was only when we returned to the pavilion at 6 o'clock that we decided, my daughter and I, to dine there. At that moment I was spoken to by my gamekeeper, who detained me a moment to ask me to accompany him on an urgent tour of inspection in a part of the woods which I had decided to thin. I put this off until the next day and begged him as he was going by the chateau to tell the steward that we should dine in the laboratory. He left me to execute the errand, and I rejoined my daughter, who was already at work.

"Q. At what hour, mademoiselle, did you go to your chamber while your father continued to work there? A. At midnight.

"Q. Did Daddy Jacques enter the yellow room in the course of the evening? A. To shut the blinds and light the night light.

"Q. He saw nothing suspicious? A. He would have told us if he had seen. Daddy Jacques is an honest man and greatly attached to me.

"Q. You affirm, M. Stangerson, that Daddy Jacques remained with you all the time you were in the laboratory?

"M. Stangerson—I am sure of it. I have no doubt of that.

"Q. When you entered your chamber, mademoiselle, you immediately shut the door and locked and bolted it? Was not that taking unusual precautions, knowing that your father and your servant were there? Were you in fear of something? A. My father would be returning to the chateau, and Daddy Jacques would be going to his bed. And, in fact, I did fear something.

"Q. You were so much in fear of something that you borrowed Daddy Jacques' revolver without telling him you had done so? A. That is true. I did not wish to alarm anybody, the more because my fears might have proved to have been foolish.

"Q. What was it you feared? A. I hardly know how to tell you. For several nights I seemed to hear, both in the park and out of the park, around the pavilion, unusual sounds, sometimes footsteps, at other times the cracking of branches. The night before the attack on me, when I did not get to bed before 3 o'clock in the morning, on our return from the Elysee I stood for a moment before my window, and I felt sure I saw shadows.

"Q. How many? A. Two. They moved round the lake. Then the moon became clouded, and I lost sight of them. At this time of the season every year I have generally returned to my apartment in the chateau for the winter, but this year I said to myself that I would not quit the pavilion before my father had finished the resume of his works on the 'Dissociation of Matter' for the academy. I did not wish that that important work, which was to have been finished in the course of a few days, should be delayed by a change in our daily habit. You can well understand that I did not wish to speak of my childish fears to my father, nor did I say anything to Daddy Jacques, who, I knew, would not have been able to hold his tongue. Knowing that he had a revolver in his room, I took advantage of his absence and borrowed it, placing it in the drawer of my night table.

"Q. You know of no enemies you have? A. None.

"Q. You understand, mademoiselle, that these precautions are calculated to cause surprise?

"M. Stangerson—Evidently, my child, such precautions are very surprising.

"A. No, because I have told you that I had been uneasy for two nights.

"M. Stangerson—You ought to have told me of that. This misfortune would have been avoided.

"Q. The door of the yellow room locked, did you go to bed? A. Yes, and, being very tired, I at once went to sleep.

"Q. The night light was still burning? A. Yes, but it gave a very feeble light.

"Q. Then, mademoiselle, tell us what happened. A. I do not know whether I had been long asleep, but suddenly I awoke and uttered a loud cry.

"M. Stangerson—Yes, a horrible cry, 'Murder.' It still rings in my ears.

"Q. You uttered a loud cry? A. A man was in my chamber. He sprang at me and tried to strangle me. I was nearly stifled when suddenly I was able to reach the drawer of my night table and grasp the revolver which I had placed in it. At that moment the man had forced me to the foot of my bed and brandished over my head a sort of mace. But I had fired. He immediately struck a terrible blow at my head. All that, monsieur, passed more rapidly than I can tell it, and I know nothing more.

"Q. Nothing? Have you no idea as to how the assassin could escape from your chamber? A. None whatever. I know nothing more. One does not know what is passing around one when one is unconscious.

"Q. Was the man you saw tall or short, little or big? A. I saw only a shadow which appeared to me formidable.

"Q. You cannot give us any indication? A. I know nothing more, monsieur, than that a man threw himself upon me and that I fired at him. I know nothing more."

Here the interrogation of Mlle. Stangerson concluded.

* * * * * * *

From a room near the chamber of Mlle. Stangerson he had heard the interrogatory and now came to recount it to my friend with great exactitude, aided by an excellent memory. His docility still surprised me. Thanks to hasty pencil notes, he was able to reproduce almost textually the questions and the answers given.

It looked as if M. Darzac were being employed as the secretary of my young friend and acted as if he could refuse him nothing—nay, more, as if under a compulsion to do so.

The fact of the closed window struck the reporter as it had struck the magistrate. The circumstance of the dinner in the laboratory also seemed to interest him in the highest degree and he had it repeated to him three times. He also wanted to be sure that the forest keeper knew that the professor and his daughter were going to dine in the laboratory and how he had come to know it.

When M. Darzac had finished I said, "The examination has not advanced the problem much."

"It has put it back," said M. Darzac.

"It has thrown light upon it," said Rouletabille thoughtfully.

CHAPTER IX.

Reporter and Detective.

ROULETABILLE, Darzac and I went back toward the pavilion. At some distance from the building the reporter made us stop and, pointing to a small clump of trees to the right of us, said:

"That's where the murderer came from to get into the pavilion."

As there were other patches of trees of the same sort between the great oaks, I asked why the murderer had chosen that one rather than any of the others. Rouletabille answered me by pointing to the path which ran quite close to the thicket to the door of the pavilion.

"That path is, as you see, topped with gravel," he said. "The man must have passed along it going to the pavilion, since no traces of his steps have been found on the soft ground. The man didn't have wings; he walked, but he walked on the gravel, which left no impression of his tread. The gravel has, in fact, been trodden by many other feet, since the path is the most direct way between the pavilion and the chateau. As to the thicket, made of the sort of shrubs that don't flourish in the rough season—laurels and fuchsias—it offered the murderer a sufficient hiding place until it was time for him to make his way to the pavilion. It was while hiding in that clump of trees that he saw M. and Mlle. Stangerson and then Daddy Jacques leave the pavilion. Gravel has been spread nearly, very nearly, up to the windows of the pavilion. The footprints of a man parallel with the wall, marks which we will examine presently and which I have already seen, prove that he only needed to make one stride to find himself in front of the vestibule window, left open by Daddy Jacques. The man drew himself up by his hands and entered the vestibule."

"After all, it is very possible," I said.

"If I did not reason as I do in regard to this gravel," Rouletabille went on, "I should have to assume a balloon. So don't say a thing is possible when it could not be otherwise. We know now how the man entered by the window, and we also know the moment at which he entered—during the 5 o'clock walk of the professor and his daughter. The fact of the presence of the chambermaid, who had come to clean up the yellow room, in the laboratory when M. Stangerson and his daughter returned from their walk at half past 1 permits us to affirm that at half past 1 the murderer was not in the chamber under the bed unless he was in collusion with the chambermaid. What do you say, M. Darzac?"

M. Darzac shook his head and said he was sure of the chambermaid's fidelity and that she was a thoroughly honest and devoted servant.

"Besides," he added, "at 5 o'clock M. Stangerson went into the room to fetch his daughter's hat."

"There is that also," said Rouletabille.

"That the man entered by the window at the time you say, I admit," I said, "but why did he shut the window? It was an act which would necessarily draw the attention of those who had left it open."

"It may be the window was not shut at once," replied the young reporter. "But if he did shut the window it was because of the bend in the gravel path a dozen yards from the pavilion and on account of the three oaks that are growing at that spot."

"What do you mean by that?" asked M. Darzac, who had followed us and listened with almost breathless attention to all that Rouletabille had said.

"I'll explain all to you later on, monsieur, when I think the moment to be ripe for doing so. But I don't think I have anything of more importance to say on this affair if my hypothesis is justified."

"And what is your hypothesis?"

"You will never know if it does not turn out to be the truth. It is of much too grave a nature to speak of it so long as it continues to be only a hypothesis."

"Have you at least some idea as to who the murderer is?"

"No, monsieur, I don't know who the murderer is. But don't be afraid, M. Robert Darzac. I shall know."

I could not but observe that M. Darzac was deeply moved, and I suspected that Rouletabille's confident assertion was not pleasing to him. Why, I asked myself, if he was really afraid that the murderer should be discovered, was he helping the reporter to find him? My young friend seemed to have received the same impression, for he said bluntly:

"M. Darzac, don't you want me to find out who the murderer was?"

"Oh, I should like to kill him with my own hand!" cried Mlle. Stangerson's fiance, with a vehemence that amazed me.

"I believe you," said Rouletabille gravely. "But you have not answered my question."

We were passing by the thicket of which the young reporter had spoken to us a minute before. I entered it and pointed out evident traces of a man who had been hidden there. Rouletabille once more was right.

"Yes, yes," he said. "We have to do with a thing of flesh and blood, who uses the same means tnat we do. It'll all come out on those lines."

Having said this, he asked me for the paper pattern of the footprint which he had given me to take care of and applied it to a very clear footmark behind the thicket. "Aha!" he said, rising.

I thought he was now going to trace back the track of the murderer's footmarks to the vestibule window, but he led us instead far to the left, saying that it was useless ferreting in the mud and that he was sure now of the road taken by the murderer.

"He went along the wall to the hedge and dry ditch, over which he jumped. See, just in front of the little path leading to the lake, that was his nearest way to get out."

"How do you know he went to the lake?"

"Because Frederic Larsan has not quitted the borders of it since this morning. There must be some important marks there."

A few minutes later we reached the lake.

It was a little sheet of marshy water, surrounded by reeds, on which floated some dead water lily leaves. The great Fred may have seen us approaching, but we probably interested him very little, for he took hardly any notice of us and continued to be stirring with his cane something which we could not see.

"Look!" said Rouletabille. "Here again are the footmarks of the escaping man. They skirt the lake here and finally disappear just before this path, which leads to the high road to Epinay. The man continued his flight to Paris."

To God's Acre

An exceptionally lengthy funeral cortege followed the remains of the late Frank Fitzgerald, of Otonabee, to St. Peter's cemetery yesterday afternoon.

Service was conducted at St. Peter's church by the Rev. Father McColl. Over 200 members of the T.A.S. and the Catholic Order of Foresters walked in the procession followed by 125 carriages.

It was one of the longest funeral processions that has been seen in Peterborough for some years and testified to the high esteem in which the late Mr. Fitzgerald was held both in Otonabee and Peterborough.

The pallbearers were all brothers of the deceased, namely ;—Patrick, Morris, Michael, Edward, John and Thos. AAnother brother William, was also present.

A SPLENDID SERMON ON IDEALS OF FRATERNITY

Parade to St. James' Church of Independent Order of Foresters—Seventy-Five Members of Order Attended Divine Service.

The Independent Order of Foresters. marshalled by Bros. Metcalfe and Brownlee, turned out about seventy-five strong last evening for worship in St. James' church. Leaving their rooms at 6.35, in charge of Bro. F. G. Rooke and Bro. J. W. Buyers, they marched in a body to the church.

THE SERMON.

A splendid fraternal society sermon was delivered by the Rev. J. G Brown from the following text; James 1, 27: "Pure religion and undefiled before our God and Father is this. to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction and to keep himself unspotted fro mthe world." Religion here means religious worship and the question before the apostles is not of doctrine, or faith, but of ritual and ceremony. St. James, a practical man, brings before the church some forgotten considerations. The two elements of right worship he would make prominent in their thoughts are first, sympathy with suffering ,and secondly, purity of conduct, active and personal endeavor to relieve suffering, and in doing good to others is always a good preparation for prayer. This too, is Christlike—it has the sanction of His example. In the parable of the judgment Christ identifies himself with the hungry, the thirsty, the naked ,the sick and the imprisoned, and by men's attitude toward "the least of these" is judged their attitude toward Himself.

PURE WORSHIP.

Pure worship made a further requirement in relation to the evil of the world. "To keep oneself unspotted" demands clear and uncompromising separation from sin. St. James re-echoed the thought of the Psalmist "Who shall ascend unto the hill of the Lord, or who shall stand in His holy place? He that hath clean hands and a pure heart; who hath not lifted up his soul to vanity nor sworn deceitfully." Safety lies only in Paul's maxim: "Shun the very appearance of evil." Indifference to sin is impossible, even dangerous, but the popular notion that an intimate knowledge of sin gained by experience, it is even more dangerous. Temptations must needs come, but "seeing life" and investigating the worst elements of human nature, is tempting the devil. Robert E. Speer makes a strong plea for ignorancee of sin—ignorance which is not blind indifference ,but which sets itself against the dissemination of the knowledge of sin, that seeks not to know the ins and outs of iniquity and seeks to keep others from knowing. Let us be assured that no man is better or stronger for having personal experience of evil. The strongest man is the good man whose heart is pure. Sin produces shame and fear and desire for concealment.

THE STANDARD.

The law of the Ten Commandmants and the Sermon on the Mount is the standard for purity. The speaker went on to make application of this to the question of sobriety, Sabbath observance, the open and unabashed profanity of men on the street, the spirit of covetousness and worship of appearance.

THE MUSIC.

Before the address a solo by Mr. Hay was given in good voice, Mr. Asa Huycke and W. Greenslade sang a duet with good effect.

At the society's rooms at the conclusion of the service votes of thanks were unanimously passed to the pastor ,choir and officers of the church.

AN ELOQUENT SERMON ON ST. JOHN THE BAPTIST

Rev. Father Fitzpatrick Described the Similarity Between the Birth of Christ and That of the Patron Saint of the French People—Volumes Yet to be Written of the Christianization of Canada

The miraculous birth, the penance of solitude in the desert, and the wonderful influence in the cause of Christianity of St. John the Baptist, the patron saint of the French people, were the themes eloquently treated of by Rev. Father Fitzpatrick, of Ennismore, in a powerful sermon at vespers at the Church of the Sacred Heart last night.

As a preface to his sermon Father Fitzpatrick read from the first chapter of St. Luke of the angel appearing before the father of St. John and telling him of the birth of his son, and of what great works he was to do in the furtherance of the kingdom of God

BIRTH SIMILAR TO CHRIST'S.

In that passage, said the speaker, we could not fail to notice that many miracles were wrought in the birth of the saint. And we could not but recognize the great similarity that existed between the birth of St. John and of our blessed Lord. The very same angel, Gabriel, had appeared before the father of St. John and before the Virgin Mary to announce the birth of St. John and of Christ. The angel said that St. John would be a great saint; that he would prepare a perfect people. Zachary, like the Virgin Mary, doubted, and because he showed a want of faith in the message of God, he had been struck dumb, and had remained so, till it pleased God to release his tongue.

In his miraculous birth and his immaculacy St. John resembles Christ. He was above all other saints, and was recognized by the church as such. In the liturgy of the church he was placed next to the blessed Virgin.

CAME TO PREPARE THE PEOPLE

St. John came to prepare the people for Christ's coming, and to fit himself for this sublime work he retired to the desert, where he was dressed in camel's hair, lived on locusts and wild honey, and his bed was a rock in the cavern.

It could be understood why some saints and great men of Bible history had retired to solitude. They had sinned, and in some cases had committed mortal sins, and had gone into solitude to do penance. But St. John had not only been born free from sin—it was the infallible faith that told us so—and the holy fathers told us he was free from sin all his life—but his spirit was also illuminated by the Holy Ghost. St. John retired to the desert to prepare for his God-given mission.

St. John was not the Christ, and yet he was taken for the Christ. His life of penance, of mortification, of self-denial, and, above, all, of sanctity—this was what made them mistake him for Christ, and they followed him out into the desert to hear him preach.

The clergy of the church had the whole life of Christ before them now, they had the sermon on the mount, and it was easy for them to preach to the people, but St. John had none of this knowledge. He had not seen Christ crucified; he had not seen Christ risen; he had not heard the sermon from the mount.

St. John was the saint that the church held up before its people.

Father Fitzpatrick regretted that more had not been given to us of the early history of Canada in which the French people had played such an important part, and wielded so wide an influence. The story of all the labors, of all the self sacrifice, and of all the blood that was shed to Christianize this fair Canada of ours was encompassed in a few pages. It would take volumes to tell of the history of the works of the early French saints in Canada, volumes that were yet to be written to enlighten the English-speaking people.

SAW THE FUNERAL OF THE HERALD FIRE VICTIMS

Ald. Jos. Metheral returned from Montreal this morning, where he attended the all-week convention of the Canadian Order of Foresters. He was accompanied by Messrs. Albert Carpenter and Andrew Jobe.

The convention was a successful affair in every way, and there was an attendance of five hundred delegates from all over the Dominion.

Alderman Metheral saw the burning of the "Montreal Herald" building, which brought death and sorrow to so many. He also witnessed the funeral of ten of the victims which was held yesterday afternoon from Ray's undertaking rooms on Mountain street. Each body was carried in a hearse, the name being shown on a card which was on the inside.

The Typographical Union, police force, and others following the cortege numbered over one thousand.

Six of the victims were Protestants and four Roman Catholics, and the respective denominations became as one, only separating at a point leading to the Roman Catholic and Protestant burial grounds.

Rev. Dr. Young, pastor of St. James' Methodist church, and formerly of this city, was one of the clergymen officiating.

LOCAL YOUNG MAN WAS TURNED BACK AT BORDER

The Canadian Order of Foresters' excursion to Niagara Saturday furnished an incident by which one of the excursionists was taken in hand by the authorities at the border, who mistook him for a foreigner and after keeping him under their eye for some hours, refused to let him enter Uncle Sam's dominions. Mr. Wm. Trotter, son of Mr. David Trotter, Water street, the young man in question, was on his way to take a position in W. E. Genno's roller rink at Buffalo. He carried a valise and he has jet black hair and a dark complexion and that is probably how the mistake was made.

THE MIGHTY HAAG SHOWS

Flaming posters in all colors of the rainbow, throughout this section give notice to the fact that the Mighty Haag shows are to be seen June 28th, in Peterborough. Already the small boy and his elders are happy in anticipating the coming of this mighty tented amusement and its countless wonders.

This season the Mighty Haag shows has been enlarged in every department and their greatly augmented list of performers, feature acts and menagerie exhibits made it necessary to add several more railway cars. To-day special trains are required to transport the huge tents, ponderous waggons, cages, dens, chariots, tableau cars, elephants, camels, horses, ponies, men and women.

In the triple zoological gardens, combined under one vast spread of canvas, are to be found the finest living specimens of rare, strange and curious animals from every quarter of the globe. Prominent in this collection is a full grown gnue, positively the only one alive in captivity to-day, captured north of Great Bear Lake, at latitude 61. It was only by exercising the great diplomacy that the Haag agents are able to get the animal out of the country. Having a head like a horse, with the exception of long horns on it and feet like a cow, forming one of the funniest and freakiest combinations in animal life. The beast is regarded as sacred by the natives and not one of them could be induced in its capture. The other exhibits of animal life are equally as rare, making a visit to the Haag show menageries of far greater educational value than ever will be gained by the deepest study of all the books at hand on the subject of natural history.

Inside the vast canvas amphitheatre are great rings and many elevated stages, encircled by a monstrous, modern hipprodome track; overcapping all is a vertical maze of trapese and horizontal bars, flying rings, ropes, wires, bars and other aerial rigging.

Concerning Shipments of Goods

THERE is no better way of locating goods, keeping track of things, and getting rid of mountains of detail than by the Bell telephone.

No other way is so far-reaching, so quick, so inexpensive, so satisfactory, and so necessary to the progressive business man. It is the modern way and takes the place of a personal visit.

If your inquiry must extend to distant points, the Bell Long Distance service is indispensable.

YOUNG VAUDEVILLE PERFORMER DIES ON OPERATING TABLE

Charles J. Eckhardt, sixteen years of age, died yesterday afternoon at Nicholls hospital, after an illness of only a few days.

The young man in company with his sister, was seen at the Royal theatre during the first three days of last week in a vaudeville act. As a result of a fall some days ago, blood-poisoning developed in the young man's face. He was taken to the hospital yesterday to be operated on, and died on the operating table.

The body will be sent to Philadelphia on the 11.45 train, where the deceased parents reside.

HORSES DIGNITY WAS UPSET

When Boy Drew Whip Across its Back and Ran Away

When the little boy who occupied the driver's seat on Head's express cart, playfully drew the whip over the horse's back this morning he did not anticipate the startling results.

The cart was standing outside Adamson and Dobbin's store, when the whip was laid on. The boy was thrown out but not hurt. The cart was damaged, the shafts and dashboard being broken, and a bicycle leaning against the pavement had its wheels badly twisted.

There was some excuse for him, according to his explanations.

PC's. McGinty and Meagher woke him up.

The order was: "Beat it."

THE MILKY WAY.

A Hundred Million Stars Gleam In That Silvery Scarf.

The census of the starry sky is concerned almost entirely with the Milky way. The number of stars not connected with it is negligible. But when you look at the Milky way the idea of numbering its stars seems the dream of a madman. It stretches all round the sky. Its extent is so unthinkably immense that science has never undertaken to measure it, and the imagination could not grasp the figures that such a measurement, if it was possible to make it, would involve.

Yet that whole enormous expanse of space occupied by the Milky way is so crowded with stars that they make upon the eye the impression of a silvery scarf wound round the brow of the universe.

It requires a telescope to see them as a broad zone of glittering points instead of an almost uniform band of whiteness in the firmament.

In some places they are more thinly scattered, so that, as you gaze through the glass, you almost think that, with infinite patience, you might count the number included in a space as large as the face of the moon.

But in other places they seem to be packed together like the sands of the seashore. They stretch away over thousands of square degrees of space, hanging in great festoons, spreading out in vast banners, where billions upon billions of cubic miles seem to be filled with stars thicker than the flakes in a driving snowstorm!

There are begemmed knots in that starry scarf so rich that the eye is dazzled and the mind confused by the spectacle which they present.

Yet science, although it shrinks from trying to estimate the space which they occupy, has succeeded in forming a fairly correct enumeration of the stars of the Milky way.

The most extravagant estimates do not put the number at more than 300,000,000, and the most trustworthy and probable make them a third less.

A hundred million stars, then, is the total population of the glittering universe, and when we see what a marvelous effect of innumerableness they produce we begin to appreciate what a hundred millions mean.—Garrett P. Serviss in New York American.

MAN'S THREE DUTIES.

I have made a code for my own guidance which may interest you. I hold that a man's first duty is to be a good husband, which implies, of course, that he ought to marry and then make his wife believe, if he can, that she has been the most fortunate of women.

It isn't easy—but, my, how it pays!

He must be lover, husband, son and even father by turns and occasionally just nobody—he must get clear off the earth. But when he comes back—

A man's second duty is to be a good father, which implies, of course, that he ought to have children—adopted, if necessary. He ought to be to them the standard by which all other men are measured and found wanting, because he is their daddy and they love him.

A man's third duty is to be a good neighbor, to carry his share, no matter how small or how great it may be, of the community's worthy enterprises, to share the sorrows and the joys of those around him, to make his home a real asset to his community.

After a man has done these three things, if he has time and means and strength, he can and should think in wider circles. But the man who does these three well is doing more than if he contributed millions and neglected these three. The man who neglects his wife or his children or his neighbors, no matter what other apparently great things he may have done, will hear Gabriel's trumpet very faintly if at all on the morning of the great day.—Erman J. Ridgway in Delineator.

When the Mule Kicks.

"No man unless he is blind should ever be kicked by a mule. There is no excuse for it. If kicked he is as much to blame as the mule," said a mule raiser. "A mule never kicks without first wagging his ears and switching his tail," said the breeder. "All you have to do is to keep your eyes on his ears and tail. And when he begins to wag his ears or switch his tail then it is time to dodge. And if you dodge quickly you will never be touched."—Kansas City Journal.

A Cold Bite.

"You were twenty miles from the north pole and starving!" exclaimed the credulous housewife. "And how did you save yourself?"

"Why, mum," responded Frigid Fred as he wiped away a tear, "in me starving moments I remembered de Eskimo dogs. Pushing out through the snow, I twisted one of der tails, an' den—an' den"—

"And then what, my poor man?"

"I got a cold bite."—Chicago News.

A QUAINT CUSTOM.

Passing of Winter Marked by Burning of the Boegg.

Switzerland still preserves some interesting customs, one of which is the spring fete annually celebrated by curious and quaint ceremonies. One would hardly think that in such a hustling commercial city as Zurich its citizens would find time for "keeping up" the memory of an affair that must date back to primitive times. But a day is set apart every year for just such a festival, called the "Burning of the Boegg," which traditionally marks the "Passing of Winter." It is also called, locally, "Sechselauten," meaning "six o'clock ringing feast," because its commencement is announced by the cathedral chimes at that early hour.

The festival this year began with a procession of boys and girls toward the great public square. The boys, dressed as pierrots, dragged the car on which the portly toy snow man stood. The pierrots were followed by knights in armor, members of various guilds in their picturesque costumes, cow herders, fishermen, clowns and others. The Boegg was a huge figure made of wood, covered with cotton wool, and stuffed with crackers and gun powder. The procession wound through the streets on either side of the river Limmat, and made its way to the square.

The figure, emblematic of spring, followed and was greeted with the welcoming cheers of the throngs gathered to witness the ceremony. Maidens in appropriate costumes escorted the triumphal car bearing the Goddess of Spring.

The procession ending its march, the Boegg was placed on an immense pile of wood. An intermission in the ceremonies occurred for lunch. In the afternoon a more important procession and function took place. The city guilds, in quaint attire, formed in line, each member dressed in the costume of his craft, as in the medieval days. These were followed by a long line of highly decorated floats, among the most noteworthy being those representing the Golden Calf, the Ceres, and the Goddess of Harvest. The citizens played practical jokes on each other during the day. When the procession reached the square the throng was immense. Near the Boegg stood several men, ready, at the prearranged signal, on the stroke of six o'clock, to blow up the figure after it had been set on fire. When the sound of the explosion was heard the people cheered, for it was an intimation that winter's reign was over, and that spring had begun.

The flames leaped up and were reflected on the placid surface of the lake, where, from the innumerable boats, fireworks added to the liveliness of the scene.

The guild houses, of which Zurich has many handsome examples, were thrown open to visitors, and the evening was devoted entirely to dancing and banqueting. Then the celebrants retired, ready next morning to resume their usual business.

Would Run No Risks.

Mrs. Crestfield's telephone bell rang the other evening, and, putting the receiver to her ear, she heard the voice of an intimate friend at the other end of the line talking excitedly.

"Oh, Mrs. Crestfield," said the voice, "isn't it dreadful? My little Ann has diphtheria!"

"How awful!" was the response. "Is she in the house?"

"Of course," replied the voice. "I have a trained nurse for her."

"If she is in the house," said Mrs. Crestfield, "I must ask you to hang up the receiver at once. I have small children of my own, you know, and diphtheria is so contagious! I don't want to seem unsympathetic, but I will not run any risks!"—New York Times.

The Postal Card Rage at Washington.

About the first thing that a visitor in Washington decides to do is to get a full supply of postal cards to send home. Many have inquired who first set the fashion. At the postoffice the other day it was revealed that the first postcards ever issued in the world were sent out from Austria in 1869, following a suggestion made in 1865. Professor Herman of Vienna is the saint on whom the postoffice clerks visit their benisons when they find difficulty in handling the sheaves of postcards coming in all the year around.—National Magazine.

JEFFERSON'S PICTURES.

A Wonderful Landscape Painted Entirely From Imagination.

Marvelous were the products of Jefferson's inspiration. He had created a school of his own. He was prone to portray forest scenes, with tree trunks of wonderful size, in accurate military formation. Old mills were a favorite subject with him, especially old mills with water wheels, and in some of his paintings he actually accomplished the impossible, for to all intents and purposes he succeeded in making the water run uphill. This having been called to his attention by an overcritical friend, Mr. Jefferson responded that he was well pleased with the result, for "few men could have accomplished it."

When president of the Players club, a position he held for so many years before his death, Mr. Jefferson presented to the club a large canvas of his own. If the writer remembers correctly, there was a pond in the foreground, with rushes, a tumbledown house and a large and rather theatrical looking forest, all painted, the artist boasted, in the dead of winter in his own sitting room and entirely from his imagination. When it was first displayed on the walls—for of course none of the old gentleman's gifts was ever refused—it attracted much attention, and one day Mr. Jefferson, being in the club, seized a brother member, who happened to be a man whose pictures had on more than one occasion won prizes in the salon, and stood him before his own masterpiece. "Now, I want you to tell me," he said frankly, with his childlike and delightful smile, "what you think of it."

"Well," replied the painter, responding to the pressure on his arm, "I'd like to have one hung as well as that." And the old gentleman was delighted.

During his lifetime that picture remained in its prominent position, and whenever Mr. Jefferson entered the club he would manage to maneuver himself in front of it, regarding it from all sides and angles, and hardly ever did a picture receive so much praise and so little criticism as that marvelous landscape.—James Barnes in Bookman.

EQUATORIAL AFRICA.

Three Things a White Person Must Have to Live There.

Without a mosquito bar a white person would be unable to live on the equator, writes Ida Vera Simonton in the Delineator.

No matter how hot and stifling the night—and no other place can be so stifling as the equatorial African night during the long rainy season in the midst of the jungle—one must sleep under a closely tucked in mosquito bar, not the ventilated kind civilization knows, but one of closely woven stuff through which no air circulates.

When the mosquito bar was let down it took in almost the entire room, but it proved especially useful in sickness and convalescence. It permitted existence free from insect bites. As malaria is the white man's most insidious foe and comes from the bite of the mosquito, every precaution must be taken against it. Three things are absolutely necessary in Africa—a mosquito bar, a water filter and quinine.

The bed was made by a native carpenter. The frame was of wood, the slats of bamboo ribs fitted closely together with the pith side uppermost. They didn't give a bit and were an excellent dancing floor for the dried plantain leaves which made the mattress. The leaves were confined beneath ticking tacked to the four sides of the bed, but they matted easily, and every night it was continuous leaf turning for me. The bamboo was slippery and insomnia kept me and the leaves on the move, so that most of the time I slept on a hard surface. My pillow was of dried sweet smelling grass. Whoever says that hard beds are beautifiers should sleep upon an African bed.

Gold Heated Water.

Over 4,000 years ago an elaborate system of filtration was established by the Egyptians to purify the waters of the Nile. In both Rome and Athens hot water was drunk in preference to cold by the small minority who used water for drinking purposes. Champier, writing in 1560, notes that the habit of drinking hot water was spreading among all classes in France "Some warm it by holding it over the fire. Others dip burning bread into it. Rich people plunge a bar of hot gold into their water before drinking it, and the less wealthy a bar of hot iron, while the very poor are content to warm their drink with a live coal."

THE RED DAB OF DEATH.

Tragic Mark on the Steel Skeleton of the Skyscraper.

"See that big blob of scarlet paint?" said the engineer as he pointed to a girder high up in the skeleton of the new skyscraper. "That red spot means that one of the men working on the building was killed by the girder sweeping him off the structure while being put in position."

The visitor craned his neck and saw a rough patch of vermilion paint on one of the floor girders up on the sixteenth story. "It must be a dangerous life," he said to his engineering friend.

"Yes. Those men up there are working under the chance of instant death at any moment. They'll walk along the topmost girder, 300 feet above the sidewalk—a little path of slippery iron five inches wide—and will lean outward against the wind. You or I couldn't do it for a second.

"Now and again there's an accident. A chap slips. A worker gets hit by a swinging girder and flung off. Another man takes an incautious step and falls off into eternity. The men working near by do their best to get at him if he manages to grab the girder he's falling from, and there are some swift and reckless races with death to get to their comrade at any cost in the five or ten seconds allowed them while strong fingers are sliding away from a slippery beam flange. If the worst happens and the man falls in spite of their efforts, then they apply the dab of red paint, and the ironworkers call it a day. They don't speak much of the man that is gone, as a rule. He's soon forgotten. The men consider it fate.

"You'd think, by the way," went on the engineer, "that the higher up these men worked the more careful they'd become. They aren't particularly careful, but they do guard against the hypnotism of height. One of the men working on a high girder gets paralyzed now and again by a sudden fear that holds him motionless and still on his iron beam.

"The men look out for this sort of thing, and the remedy is to distract his attention by a rough blow on the back or in some cases by exciting him to anger through any means in their power. When the man gets fighting mad he is freed from the paralysis of terror or whatever you may choose to call it. He gets up from his girder to make a rush for the other fellow to do him up, and the moment he is safe he is restrained by the other men.

"Whenever you see a skyscraper framework," concluded the engineer, "each dab of scarlet paint on the iron means that some man has come to his death. Every skyscraper and every bridge is the monument to some little group of unknown workers, laboring at dizzy heights and dallying with sudden death as part of their day's work."—New York Press.

A Poverty Stricken Queen.

Partly owing to the fact that she was wedded to an avaricious king and partly because she was generous with the little money allowed her Elizabeth of York, queen of Henry VII., spent but a small amount for dress. She was very often in debt, and the sums she spent were ridiculously small, 20 shillings ($5) being the greatest amount expended at any one time. Her gowns were mended and turned, and new waists were made for them, as is shown by the record of bills paid to her tailor. These bills prove that she wore her clothes for a long time, for her gowns were obliged to be newly hemmed, and also that, though a princess of the great house of Plantagenet, she wore shoes costing but 24 cents, which were decorated with tin buckles!

Made It Clear.

A senator, speaking of the advantages of clearness of statement, told a story about a restaurant to illustrate his meaning. He said:

"This restaurant advertised a dinner, but not in the loose way many other restaurants advertise dinner as between certain hours, whether there would be enough dinner to last between those hours or not. No. The man who runs that restaurant has a proper knowledge of his responsibilities and of the exact use of the language. He advertised, 'Chicken pie, 25 cents; from 12:30 until gone.'"—

AN AGE OF LUXURY.

Dress and Novelties In Food Now Objects of Greatest Importance.

Of late years, writes Lady Violet Greville, in an English publication, dress has acquired extraordinary importance. People who dressed as a necessity of their station now make dress an aim in itself. A dandy might have possessed a wardrobe full of coats, or, like the late Panmure Gordon, cherished an indulgence in 100 pairs of boots, but these were the exception, and were regarded as eccentrics. The amount of suits required by the average man now cannot be counted on the fingers. There are lounge suits and dress suits, fur coats and frock coats, dinner jackets and smoking suits, motor, golf, shooting and fishing costumes, each of which requires waistcoats, stockings and boots to match. With a woman it is even worse. Boxes enough to load a cab are required for each week-end visit, and the same dress cannot be worn twice. Our grandmothers bought lace and furs when they were married to last them their life, but the constant changes of fashion necessitate endless expenditure. Every bride in society has her diamond tiara and her sables, every shop girl wears her fur boa and carries her muff. Each year furs grow dearer, and each year women spend more on these accessories to dress. The average expenditure of a well-dressed woman is about three times that of her mother, who probably could have afforded more.

Luxury in food, too, increases. Though we may not indulge in such long and heavy dinners as our ancestors, we eat more delicately, more expensively of forced strawberries, plover's eggs, early asparagus or petitis poussins, etc., and require better cooks. Restaurants and hotels vie with each other in introducing novelties and out-of-season luxuries, and the standard of the gourmet grows higher every day. The kind of meal that once satisfied a fastidious man about town, the plain dinner that was so popular with the guests of Charlie Paris, the wine merchant, or Sir Henry Thompson, the surgeon, a bit of codfish, a beefsteak and onions, toasted cheese and a woodcock, would be considered very poor fare now to put before one's guests, who do not want to taste wine, or enjoy the flavor of claret, but to drink champagne all through dinner, and smoke cigarettes directly after.

Dirty Patagonia.

"Patagonians are not giants, as some have supposed and as the geographies teach," said a man who has traveled. "They are large in comparison with the other South American natives, that is all. Everything is relative, you know. But they are very fat. That is why they can stand the cold so well. I have seen Patagonian men and boys running around unclad while I was wrapped in warm garments, with the snow falling upon them in quantities and the wind blowing bitterly. They are kept warm by their fat and dirt. Patagonia is one of the dirtiest places imaginable. Don't go there if you hate dirt. That is my advice to all who contemplate a journey to the jumping off place of South America."

Political Burglaries.

It was through a stolen document openly seized by the British ambassador in Berlin that the British Government first learned of the recognition of the independence of America by France. The British Minister was Hugh Elliot, and he had the desk of the French Minister forced open to obtain the copy of the treaty he wanted. In 1855 a sensation was created by the discovery of a plan by which secret documents were systematically abstracted from the Russian embassy in Berlin, being copied at night in the interests of another nation and replaced in the drawer at the embassy in the morning. The burglaries had been taking place for two years before they were discovered.

Not Much Work.

"Some folks think that people in the show business have an easy time of it," said a minstrel star, "and that reminds me of what an old farmer in a little town said one day as he saw me carrying the bass drum in the minstrel parade. We had walked nearly five miles in the hot sun, and I was about ready to drop. That big drum was heavy. When we reached our car after the parade my feet were sore, my back ached, I was perspiring all over my face and was completely tired out. As I almost staggered past the old farmer he looked at me contemptuously.

"'Huh,' he said, 'these actors 'll do anything to get out of workin'.'"

A Slang Phrase.

"Bull con," a slang phrase which means to flatter, to praise with ulterior motives, had its origin in the west years ago. When the gold brick game was started the bunko men sprang a fine, high-sounding combination of words upon the simple farmers. They called it an investment in "bullion consolidated." Years after the words were cut down to "bull con" and came to mean any graft that depended upon the gift of gab. Still later it was used to describe the method of flattery.

Lord Morley as a Waltzer.

Like Lord Morley, Sir Charles is a scholar as well as a politician. Lady Dilke once stated that her first waltz was danced with Lord Morley. "And a very good waltzer he was too," she said. In his hours of relaxation Sir Charles is devoted to rowing and the rapier, while the late Lady Dilke, who was well known as an art critic as well as social reformer, made the collecting of rare books her chief hobby.

The Disappointed Prodigal.

Slowly, with bowed head and faltering step, the prodigal son walked up the garden path.

His father, an old man, wrinkled and white-bearded, stood at the door.

"Father, father," cried the P. S., "I've come home to die!"

"Just my luck!" groaned the old man. "I let your insurance policy lapse last month!"

Moral Suasion and a Strap.

"She seems to have abandoned her moral suasion ideas relative to the training of children."

"She has."

"How did it happen?"

"Well, I was largely instrumental in bringing about the change. You see, she has no children of her own, and I grew weary of her constant preaching and theorizing, so I loaned her our Willie."

"Loaned her your boy?"

"Precisely. She was to have him a week on her solemn promise to confine herself entirely to moral suasion."

"Did she keep her promise?"

"She did, but at the expiration of the week she came to me with tears in her eyes and pleaded for permission to whale him just once."—New York Mail.

Confucius on Kingcraft.

"What is kingcraft?" demanded a disciple.

"Were there no help for it which could be best spared of the three?"

"Troops," said the master.

"And were there no help for it which could be better spared of the other two?"

"Food," said the master. "From of old all men die, but without trust a people cannot stand."

Settin'.

A farmer was sawing wood when it occurred to him that he ought to have the help of one or more of his five boys. Lifting up his voice, he called, but not a boy appeared.

At dinner, of course, they all appeared, and it was not necessary to call them.

"Where were you all about two hours ago, when I wanted you and shouted for you?"

"I was in the shop settin' the saw," said one.

"And I was in the barn settin' a hen," said the second.

"I was in gran'ma's room settin' the clock," said the third.

"I was in the garret settin' the trap," said the fourth.

"You are a remarkable set," remarked the farmer. "And where were you?" he continued, turning to the youngest.

"I was on the doorstep settin' still."—Judge.

OF INTEREST TO THE GIRLS

THE girl who is blessed with a talent for millinery is a much to be envied young person this year, for the hats are all so attractive and so especially becoming to young girls that it requires quite too much expenditure of money to be provided with all the hats desired unless they can be made at home. Fortunately, this is an age of the world when it is fashionable to be practical, and millinery classes are most popular—classes where girls listen to practical talks as to how to utilize to the best advantage materials and trimmings.

Many of the newest hats have large crowns of silk, while the brim is of the straw, either white or the shade of the silk crown. As it is the crowns rather than the size or shape of the hats this summer that have changed character since last year, it is a good scheme to make a last season's tennis hat quite up to date by removing the straw crown and placing over the wire frame a large silk kerchief. The large square silk handkerchief can now be had for from fifty cents upward in any coloring, from the palest shades of pink, blue and mauve to the most brilliant and now so fashionable Persian hues.

In actual width this year hats are really not larger than the widest worn twelve months ago, and the shapes and curves of the brim have not been materially altered. It is the straight crowns and the large head size, which permits the new hats to almost completely cover the head, which make the difference that is so apparent. If a hat that was once a favorite shape is still in sufficiently good condition therefor, it is possible by removing the crown and cutting slits in the inner side of the brim to enlarge the head size, and then by recovering the crown with a square of silk or a silk handkerchief bought for the purpose, an extremely pretty, up to date hat can be evolved at delightfully small cost. If the hat has already a wire foundation beneath the straw so much the better, but if not, wire crowns can now be bought which can be attached to any frame. A wire frame will, of course, make the hat lighter than when the straw is left and simply covered over with the silk.

THE silk square of the crown is generally the only trimming on the hat. The silk must be put on quite soft and full, with the ends gathered into a loop or bowknot in the front or a little to one side. If the silk is very soft the ends may be wired to give more style to the bow. A wide flowered ribbon may also be used to cover the crown, two widths probably being necessary. A large double bowknot of the same ribbon placed directly at the back will be extremely pretty on a white straw tennis hat. The wider part of the brim may be faced with the same ribbon, and the color is sure to prove becoming against the face.

For a white hat which has become discolored or a light straw which is faded and yet still retains its good shape, an application of straw paint should be applied. This fluid is made solely for coloring straw and will not run when rained upon, as shoe blacking has been found to do by any one who ever tried to freshen up an old hat by applying to the head adornment that which was intended only for footgear. With this coloring fluid an old black hat can be painted to look like new, and any hat can be restored to its pristine brilliancy of coloring or changed to any other color desired.

AN old sailor hat that, while still of fashionable size as regards crown and brim, is brown from dust and age and also sadly bent out of shape, can be made as good as new by first dampening the brim and placing the hat on some perfectly flat, even surface and putting on top of the brim several heavy books. It should be left in this rack for perhaps a day or two, and then when absolutely stiff and dry should be given a new coat of this black paint, which can be bought at most large department stores.

Lace hats elaborately bedecked with flowers and ribbon are fashionable for afternoon wear, but for the morning the long, popular lingerie hat has been superseded by a simple wide brimmed straw shape trimmed only with a wide, rather flat bowknot of plain or fancy colored ribbon. For this style of hat a yellow, tuscan or burnt straw is best as both white and all the light shades change color or so in the sun. When a pretty and becoming shape has been found it is an excellent plan to buy for it several different ribbon bowknots, to be changed according to the color of the gown to be worn. Large bows well wired, with an end of the ribbon to go about the crown can be bought, or the ribbon can first be bought and wired in the shop according to directions. Unless a girl has a special knack at matching pretty, effective bows and rosettes it will be worth the slight extra expense to have the ribbon made up and wired at the store where it is bought.

The large flat bows may really be placed anywhere at all upon the hat. In some models the trimming is all directly in front, in others just at the back, again a bowknot is seen a little at one side of the crown, sometimes to the right and again to the left, while oftentimes the bow is composed of many long loops which fall over and completely cover the crown. There are infinite possibilities of designs that can be carried out with different arrangement and color of ribbons all upon the same hat. A box of milliner's pins will make possible the adjustment of any ribbon trimming, for when the adornment of a hat is to be changed, perhaps every day in the week, even basting is a waste of time. The end of ribbon that is left to go about the crown must be long enough to tie in through the centre of the bow knot, thus making it more secure.

Summer time gives splendid opportunity for those classes which are more fun than work, and a course in simple millinery is an excellent one for any girl who would like to lengthen out the possibilities of her allowance.

The Girl Who Can Organize.

THAT many young girls have a decided talent for organization is without question. It is as distinctly a characteristic with them as their fathers' ability to run railroads or other business enterprises. As a rule girls find an abundant use for this talent. It makes them, besides, leaders among other girls instead of merely individuals that pass with the crowd. It is to such girls that an appeal is made when there is an occasion to get up something, either for pleasure or for service to others.

A young miss with a talent for organization must have energy and a clever brain, besides a knowledge of many resources that can be turned quickly to her account. She must have the knack of firing her friends with enthusiasm and of placing their activities in paths leading to the accomplishment of her own desires.

One young girl with this talent has of late been busy organizing a fin de la saison matinee club. Earlier in the season she arranged the details for a party of twelve which went up to the "Promenade" at New Haven.

To organize and put through successfully a matinee club is not, she relates, an easy matter. Although the members of it, fourteen in number, are all friends and about the same age, they have not the same taste—a fact which must be borne in mind when the plays are chosen for the club to see. Some girls care only for plays that make them laugh, others prefer those that make them weep, while there are still others so complex that they profess to laugh through sad scenes and to weep at those that are funny.

The girl who organizes a matinee club must inform herself long in advance on the plays that are to be presented and must make early arrangements for the comfortable seating of the club. She has also to assign the seats to the members. In doing this her tact is usually stretched painfully near its limit. Girls have many whims about the especial friends they wish to sit beside, although in the interest of the sociability of the club it is well to change the seating order with every meeting.

Occasionally the organizer complains that she shoulders all the responsibility in the beginning and bears all the fault finding in the end. Nevertheless she knows that she has been of benefit to her friends and has had meantime her own satisfaction, for to organize is not only her talent but one of the joys of her life.

The miss who has the matinee club under way has also arranged a morning club to visit the museums of the city. All young girls desire to acquaint themselves with the many wonderful collections on exhibition, but often, unless there be some added incentive, the fulfilment of the wish is relegated to a day in the unnamed future. Through the energy of the miss with the talent for organization the dates to go to various museums have become fixed engagements. The pleasure, moreover, that the girls gain by going together makes these dates of the club more desirable to keep than any others.

For the oncoming summer, and even the next winter, this talented miss has many plans that she declares will amuse and benefit her friends, and incidentally herself. It is needless to add that she is very popular.

COMFORT IN MOTORING.

THE girl who does a great deal of motoring will often find it pretty cold if she is not thoroughly wrapped up, even though the spring is here and the weather may be growing warmer.

The strong wind that is caused by swift motion calls for thorough protection if one wants to be really comfortable. Two new inventions have lately come out in England which are great aids to this much desired end, and any girl can make them both for herself if she cannot buy them, which she probably can do if she prefers to. They are a vest protector and a long motor veil edged with fur.

The vest protector, besides helping to keep one warm, has a secondary usefulness in protecting from dust the front of a white or light colored waist. So many cloaks and coats are a little open at the neck in front that the top of the waist is exposed and is very quickly soiled.

The protector is made like the top of a tight fitted waist, buttoned straight down the front. It is cut off a little below the bust line in front and straight up the sides a little way in from the shoulders. From there the line goes around the back about three inches below the neck, and at the top is a high standing collar. The vest protector may be made of almost any material, but, of course, something that will wash is most serviceable.

The veil is made of one of the soft silk materials not chiffon, something thicker and stronger, and must be three or four yards long. It is edged all around with a band of fur and some have a second and narrower band inside. This fur protects the back of the neck especially and the long ends of the veil can be used as a substitute for a muff. By turning them up under one can keep her hands just as warm as with a real muff, and many are the days when one starts out on a motor ride with no idea of needing a muff and before long finds one's fingers tingling with cold.

A veil without the fur can, of course, be used in the same way, but the difference in warmth is enormous. Even narrow bands of fur bunched together give great warmth.

PRACTICAL TALKS BY THE GRANDMOTHER

"A WOMAN'S feet grow indefinitely," announced the April Grandmother. And while her astounded young friends were still uttering gasps of dismay at this unwelcome piece of news she continued:—"That is why so many girls walk clumsily. They keep on buying what they call their 'regular sizes' in shoes when in reality their feet are constantly widening and lengthening.

"Ease and grace of carriage belong naturally to few girls, yet many of them might acquire it first by admitting to themselves that their feet are not of fairy-like proportions and then by learning to walk correctly. As awkward walking detracts so greatly from the appearance, it is remarkable that parents do not impose a penance upon daughters who persist in walking on their heels, turning up, turning in or spreading out their toes or—most slovenly of all—walking on the sides of the feet.

"The girl who realizes that her walk is awkward is apt to make the mistake of imitating some one else and to adopt a lope or wiggle utterly unsuited to the proportions of her figure, for the length of each individual's step should be exactly adjusted to the length of the leg, the toe ever so slightly turned outward, the weight balanced on the balls of the feet and the body allowed to sway forward from the ankles.

"Girls of a nervous temperament rarely acquire a gliding, graceful walk, because their steps are likely to be uneven and jerky instead of smooth and regular. In order to walk evenly the foot must be set upon the ground in an almost straight position, raised a trifle upon the toes and let down lightly in a way which shall not show the sole of the shoe. And if, in addition to this method of locomotion, the knees move flexibly, as in the skating motion, the shoulders are thrown back and the head is held up, a swaying, easy step will soon be acquired. But even then a girl will not look graceful when walking if her elbows are allowed to stick out or her arms to swing from the body like those of a windmill.

"Under the impression that a languid manner is attractive, some girls form the habit of putting one foot forward and dragging the other. This affectation more nearly resembles the slow, heavy gait of the elephant than the airy, floating movement of the swan.

"The girl who is afflicted with large pedal extremities should not go stumping through the world, but make ceaseless efforts to step lightly, and in order to accomplish this her feet must [illegible] absolute muscular freedom, which can only be furnished by a shoe that is sufficiently wide at the top and ball and not too large at the heel. The same shoe rule applies to those who have small feet, for only through foot comfort can a girl maintain serenity of disposition and, by her ability to walk several miles each day, retain indefinitely a reedlike, willowy figure."

TO KEEP CLIPPINGS.

IF one has the "clipping habit" and does not have some regular place to keep them the little pieces of paper generally become a nuisance and are constantly in the way. And yet any girl who takes much interest in reading is sure to find something every now and then that she would like to keep.

The best way to manage the question is to have a classified clipping case and so keep them all ready for immediate reference whenever they are wanted. Such a saving of time and energy there is in not having to hunt for what one wants on the instant. An easy way to make a clipping case is to buy some of the long legal envelopes and mark each one with a word, or several words, indicating some subject one is interested in, and then fasten them all together.

The words should be painted or done in fancy lettering with a pen. Such subjects as "Travel," "Art," "Drama," "Music," "Useful Suggestions" are used, but the maker can choose her own subjects, and new envelopes can be added at any time.

After the envelopes are marked two covers must be made just the same size as the envelopes. They are made of cardboard, painted or covered with brocade or embroidered linen. They are placed outside of the envelopes, and the whole thing is fastened together by cutting holes through them all near each end of the lower edge of the envelopes, the side away from the flaps, putting a ribbon through the holes and tying a bow at the back. These ribbons can at any time be pulled out and new envelopes p... in, either to renew torn ones or to add a new subject.

The covers of these cases are sometimes very beautiful. Some are made of handsome brocade and others of leather, with cut designs lined with satin. Any kind of elaborate embroidery may also be used.

EVENING SCARFS.

PERSIAN silks, chiffons and ribbons are unquestionably the craze of the moment for trimmings, for linings, for whole waists, for belts and ties and even for art embroideries. These Oriental textures in their soft fascinating colorings are now to be seen everywhere.

The Persian scarfs are most effective bordered with marabout or ostrich feathers or with bands of plain colored silk. For all sorts of work bags and for cases for underwear, ties and jabots, &c., the lighter toned Persian silks are charming.

From a two yard length of Persian chiffon a fascinating evening wrap for midsummer can be fashioned by a girl herself, with little skill required. If double width the chiffon should be cut down the centre and pointed at each end, gathered in slightly at the seam which forms the centre of the wrap. This Persian chiffon is then lined on both sides with white or some pale colored chiffon or chiffon cloth through which the Persian coloring will still be distinct. Where the cape falls over the shoulders the three thicknesses of chiffon should be gathered in loosely over from one to three rows of thick cording. The ends of the scarf or wrap are then finished with a deep sewing silk fringe, white or a color to tone in with the chiffon. A border of satin or taffeta will be effective, but if there is an old marabout boa that can be utilized, a far handsomer wrap will be the result.

This wrap calls for no fitting, cutting or draping—simply a straight length of chiffon about two yards in length by a yard in width. A straight strip of soft satin of the same dimensions can be utilized in the same way if a somewhat warmer wrap is desired. For midsummer, however, three thicknesses of chiffon will be sufficient, and carried out in pale, cool colorings this Persian cape is sure to evoke constant admiration.

The Apple Blossom Party.

ANY girl who goes early to a country home adjacent to a city should give an apple blossom party to her friends still in town. Our lovely apple blossoms are the nearest approach we have to the Japanese cherry blossoms, so prized in the flowery kingdom that every one, high and low, during the blooming time makes a fête in honor of them. Many think our apple blossoms are beautiful enough to deserve similar honors, and besides it is an ideal time to ask people to the country, for everything is then its loveliest in its fresh garb of green.

If your home is not large enough for a house party and you wish to invite young men as well as girls, have them out for a Sunday luncheon or a high tea. If you are having a house party all of your guests will assist you in gathering blossoms for the fête, but if they come for a short time you will have everything prepared. In the latter instance part of the programme will be an afternoon walk or drive to see the splendors of surrounding pink orchards, and this must be arranged for and mentioned in the invitation, planning it to take place either after luncheon or before a high tea.

In inviting your guests designate the train on which they are to arrive and have it understood that they will be met at the station on their arrival and conveyed to your house. You, of course, do not meet them yourself, but your brother does, if you have one, and if not your coachman or your chauffeur looks out for them. If your guests outnumber your private conveyances you order what is required from the local livery or your neighbors may be obliging in offering their motor cars to help you out. You, of course, see that they get to the station for their return train in the same manner.

When you send out your invitations write them on large corresponding cards at the top of which is painted a delicate spray of apple blossoms. Similar blossoms should adorn the place cards on your table. Boughs and sprays of the natural flowers should ornament the rooms and the color scheme of the luncheon or supper table be pink. In decorating the rooms do not overdo it. Too many flowers are inartistic. Copy the Japanese and have just a few branches, some large and some small, here and there. If you wish Japanese ideas in floral arrangement study the manner in which artificial flowers are placed in vases in their shop windows in any of our big cities and then go home and do likewise. Whatever they do with cherry blossoms you can do as beautifully with apple blossoms, and you will astonish yourself and your friends with your artistic effects.

Make a lovely centrepiece of the blossoms for your table, putting them in a glass bowl so that the stems show through and keeping your design low, for a high arrangement of flowers, while stunning in certain places, is undesirable on a dining table, where it cuts people off from seeing one another. Use a white lace cloth over a pink lining and pink ribbons in bands and bows for further embellishment. If you wish to serve a tea punch or lemonade you can ornament the bowl most charmingly by twining small twigs of blossoms around the top, wreath fashion. This is done by wiring the edge of the bowl first, in order to have something to fasten the flowers to.

Wear a pink gown and put a spray of apple blossoms in your hair, providing similar ones for the other girls, if it is a supper, but not, of course, if a luncheon, for then they would not remove their hats. The young men guests should be presented with boutonnières of the blossoms. On a table in your hall have a big jar full of the flowers in whose honor you are giving the fête and distribute them to your parting guests to take back to town with them.

You can give a delightfully poetic touch to the whole thing by hunting up what the poets have said about apple blossoms and either reciting a poem yourself or asking one of your guests to do so. You can also make your place cards and your invitations more attractive by quoting on them a verse anent apple blossoms, such verse being written at the top of the corresponding cards used and at the bottom of the place cards, where the name of the guest should take precedence.

THIS IS MRS. GRUNDY.

ALL girls know "Mme. Grundy," the social oracle, whose word is law, but how many ever thought whence came this authoratitive, awe-inspiring lady?

She is purely mythical, and, amusingly enough, has been ever since she was created as a character in a play in which she never appeared!

In an old English comedy called "Speed the Plough," written in the eighteenth century by Thomas Morton, the author had two rival farmers' wives, one of whom—Mrs. Grundy—remained invisible throughout though constantly kept before the minds of the audience by the other farmers' wife in the question, "What will Mrs. Grundy say?"—perpetually asked about everything that was transpiring in the play.

Imaginary Mrs. Grundy caught the public fancy, and through the centuries has so grown in importance that she is now the embodiment and the dictator of the proprieties.

LITTLE MISS DANDELION.

NOW that the spring is coming on, if you want a trusty barometer watch the dandelion. It is marvellously sensitive to weather conditions when it has seeded and is at the fluffy stage.

Then when the weather is fine the ball will be full, but if you see it closing or find it closed you may know that rain is approaching.

If after a shower the ball does not begin to expand you can rely on the fact that the storm is by no means over.

Just as long as there are showers in the air little Miss Dandelion keeps her fluffy self tightly curled, for the wet would quite spoil her featheriness.

C. G. E. AND BOWMANVILLE PLAYED TO A TIE 2-2

The Canadian General Electric football team went to Bowmanville Saturday to meet the team in that town for the first of the Midland league finals and the locals kicked the same number of goals as their opponents. The score was 2—2. As the figures would tend to indicate, the contest was a hard fought one throughout.

The return game will be played here next Saturday.

A PRUDENTIAL OUTING

Saturday afternoon the Peterborough staff of the Prudential Insurance Company journeyed to Chemong Park, as guests of Superintendent J. I. Allen.

The main feature of the afternoon sports was a baseball game under the supervision of Captains Allen and Sedgwick. Green, the world renowned spit-ball artist, had 12 strike outs to his credit. Lonergan "the smiling Shamrock, handled Green's curves artistically. Capt. Allen, was there with the big stick, obtaining five hits at five times up. The ninth innings finish was a scene long to be remembered. With the bases full and none out, Sherry, the southpow graduate of Swat Milligan, came to the rescue with two strikes and three balls against him. He caught the next ball pitched square on the nose of the bat, and when the dust cleared away it was found that the Sedgwickers had won by the close score of 6 to 5. Amid mighty cheers fromthe fans, the players returned to the hotel where they sat down to a fish supper, especially prepared by Manager Rickey.

The return home was made about 7.30 and all were in loud praise of Superintendent Allen's outing.

NOTES ON Y. M. C. A. SPORTS

The Wolf and Eagle patrols of the Boy Scouts held an outing Saturday morning. The Wolf patrol laid the trail which was taken up by the Eagle patrol, who succeeded in running the former down away up the canal, near Hamilton's camp. Here the boys all enjoyed a swim in the canal, under the supervision of Mr. Thompson. On returning home about 1.00 p.m. all voted it the best outing we have held this season. Boys, do not fail to get in on next Saturday's outing, it is to be bigger, longer, better than ever, so get in line next week.

SEVEN HUNDRED FANS SAW ALL STARS AND T.A.S. DO BATTLE

Benefit Game a Great Success---Each Team Secured Nine Hits, But the Stars Bunched Five in the Third and Sent as Many Men Across --Final Count 7-3 for the Picked Team.

There have been a lot of ball games on the field across the way, but this last affair "was ripping don't you know," the chappies say. There were hits and errors, plenty, there were plays in big league style, there were many close decisions, there were stunts to make you smile. Pilling's All Star aggregation shot ahead and won the heat. 'twas nerve racking and the grandstand, more than once jumped to their feet. Sometimes at the teams they'd holler, sometimes it was at the lad, who was calling all the putouts,

And Teddy Did

sometimes they got awful mad. Sometimes too the players got it, they some times performed like dopes, but more often, they were starring, no one cried they'd cut the ropes. Just in passing we might mention that the fans turned out galore, and perhaps if things get busy they will see the teams once more. For there's talk about a lay-down, rabbit's feet and other dope, but dear fan, while this may jar you, you know best, you saw the smoke. 'Twas a struggle to the finish, you can bet your plunks on that, and the team that bunched their swatting, only went eight times to bat. Ball games sure have funny features, but not often do we see, twirlers losing reputations, to allow a batting bee,

There is something else to mention, there is class to our fair band, big Ed. Cronk, Bob Beach and Harper, sure is due each fan's glad hand. That parade along the front street looked O. K., it made a hit, it also brought many nickles, made the figures jump a bit. Here's something, 'twill likely stop you, one fair fan did things up brown, 'stead of hanging out her ten cents, planked a silver quarter down.

Here's another that will floor you, two stout ladies came in late, they presented one gent's ticket, to the juggler at the gate. Said one smiling, "don't you think sir, that two handsome dames like we, are not equal to a man sir," He said "yes, that's one on me." Riley's ice cream joint they raided, made poor "Fish" work overtime, they cried when in the grandstand, "O you All Stars, you for mine."

Now a few words of this great game, there is lots of room to spiel, first of all let's toast the umpire, he has lots of room to squeal. Were you ever at a contest, where the man who has to talk, didn't have to stand for pet names, perhaps you've seen him get a "pop." He was called upon to think fast, and we'll bet if some of us, had been out there on the ball green, we'd have made an awful mess. He's the same as many others, who have done this same old job, and could see a whole lot better, than the much excited mob. He don't care a rap who bawls out "douse the cobwebs" 'use your eye" he's out there to give a square deal, but no matter how he tries, he gets roasted, sometimes pelted, but he smiles and never swerves, he should get the hand and bouquets, that is what "his umps" deserves.

Did you figure at the startoff, which one team would land the win, Did you notice how that first run of the T. A. S. came in. Perhaps you had your peekers working, when the Stars came in to try. Did you notice how the picked team, made the run that caused the tie. Then perhaps you kept on watching, saw the All Stars start and drive, that's the time the Pilling outfit, tore around and gathered five.

"Prunes" in the Third

Those few pegs which sent in Mogul, that bum play which gave "Bat" life, that live catch of Teddie Pilling's, all were features of the strife. Dickie's feat, his mighty double, helped a whole lot in the third, and that play "Ted" "Min" to catcher, put away the Quinlan herd. "Fat" Giroux's neat catch off second, Jim O'Hearn's hit in the last Prevmie's balk, these stunts were winners, made the contest to the last. Fast and scrappy, full of interest, errors true, there were a few, now the T.A.S. are talking, what next time the team will do.

GROUNDERS.

Jimmie Pilling had an easy time at right, but contributed one hit an a run.

Dickey's hit was timely. He had three nice ones, of which one was a double.

Weatherston had a big day at second. One run, two hits and seven assists.

Craig's doings at first was three errors out of 21 chances. A good average.

Laing's work behind the bat was excellent.

Ed. Pilling's high class juggling was hard on the nerves and that relay throw on the last out was pretty.

There was some fast running to first, but you have to go some to put it over that man Thompson.

Dusty pitched effectively, and that covers a whole lot of ground.

Minorgan used his head and fielded cleanly.

There's something peculiar about Callaghan's twice at bat, no hits and no runs performance.

Quinlan says "that third inning had me stopped. I pitched for all that was in me."

Two hits, one run, ten put outs and but one error was what Flaherty got away with.

That was covering some ground, that catch of Giroux's behind second.

Two ones for Cahill, a hit and an assist.

The same number for Jack Corkery, but it was one hit and no error.

BORDEN AND WHITNEY ADDRESS GREAT GATHERING AT FALLS

Welland Picnic Proves Great Success and Speakers Are in Fine Fighting Shape—Premier Whitney Pays a Tribute to Ex-Judge Doherty.

Niagara Falls, Ont., June 21.—Sir James Whitney, Premier of Ontario, and R. L. Borden, M.P., leader of the Opposition at Ottawa, were the guests of honor at the big political picnic in Queen Victoria Park here yesterday, under the auspices of the Niagara Falls and Welland County Conservative Associations. About 8,000 enjoyed the oratory of the day and the music of the Thorold brass band.

Sir James Whitney paid a graceful compliment to the work of Hon. Mr. Doherty, who, he said, had been called to the bench at an early age, and after having served the allotted time had retired into private life, and was giving his energy and experience to the cause of good Government.

"While I am not here this afternoon to take advantage of the occasion to address you upon the merits of the Ontario Government, yet I am prepared to say to you as an illustration and as a guarantee of what Mr. Borden and his followers will do. I am inclined to touch upon some provincial questions which have been carried through by the present Government."

Sir James then referred to the remark, often passed, that the Conservative party had no capacity for administration.

"That was said," declared the Premier, "when, after two occasions, they approached me and endeavored to get me to join with them in the Government of the country."

The Premier spoke of the abolition of that "monstrosity of scoundrelism," the numbered ballot, the increase in the revenues of the province, and the distribution of the railway tax to the municipalities, the establishment of agricultural schools and enlarged grants to educational purposes, the enforcement of the license law, the establishment of the Ontario Railway and Municipal Board, "which has already ripened its cost ten times over to the people of Ontario," and the placing of the finances upon sound basis.

"And," he said, "we have every reason to believe to-day, and I am prepared to state it here with confidence, that we see no reason to anticipate anything in the future—in provincial finance other than continued surpluses for the people and for the advantage of the people."

"One more point I should have mentioned," continued Sir James, "it has been said, it has been printed, it has been repeated by men who know better, that we prepared a scheme interfering with vested rights, that it interfered with the rights of property, and that it interfered with the rights of a man to go to the courts.

"Every one of these three statements are absolute falsehoods. To-day there is nothing to prevent the only man who ever brought an action, which they say was stopped, from going forward with it."

"I have great confidence in Mr. Borden," added Sir James. I am prepared to sign a bond that he will not go to Boston and say that he values the American dollar above the British shilling, he never will say that he looks for the separation of the tie which binds the Dominion of Canada to the British Empire; he never would oppose and he never will oppose the sending of a contingent of Canadian soldiers—when they want to go—to the aid of the British Empire across the seas."

Mr. Borden spoke on the conservation of natural resources.

"This can be accomplished without discouraging private enterprise and without depriving men of foresight, research and enterprise of the legitimate advantage to which they are entitled by the employment of capital," said he.

"One watchword of the Liberal party in opposition is still remembered, 'Land for the settler, and not for the speculator.' It is within the memory of all that this principle has been most outrageously disregarded since 1896.

"The public resources of this country belong to the people of Canada and not to the Government. They have been exploited in hundreds of instances for the benefit of partisans without regard for the advantage of the people as a whole. The Conservative party has attacked the action of the Government in many instances where that policy has been disregarded. Our investigations have been burked, but our efforts have not all been in vain.

"Some amelioration of conditions has been made during recent years, although from time to time instances still occur where the benefit of a few party friends outweighs in the estimation of the Government the public advantages and interests."

Mr. Borden then reviewed the St. Lawrence Power Transmission Co. legislation of the past session, and the all-night sitting of Parliament; and also the Indian land scandal at Selkirk.

VARSITY HONORS THE THREE MEN WHO FELL AT RIDGEWAY

Military Display Accompanies Function in Toronto When Three Beautiful Windows Are Unveiled in East Hall.

Toronto, June 21.—With all due honor and military display, the memorial window to the members of the university company of the Queen's Own Rifles, who fell at Ridgeway, June, 1866, was unveiled yesterday afternoon in the east hall of the main building of the University of Toronto by Hon. J. M. Gibson, Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario, and president of the University Alumni Association. Those on the platform were: Sir Henry Pellatt, Sir Charles Moss, Sir William Meredith, Byron E. Walker, President Falconer, Chancellor Burwash and Provost Macklem.

On either side of the raised dais the guard of honor, chosen from the Q.O.R., stood at attention during the ceremonies. Just prior to the unveiling, Sir Henry Pellatt read, to the strains of the "Last Post," the honor roll of the University and Trinity College companies. The flags covering the windows were then pulled aside and the guard gave a general salute.

In all there were three windows, symbolical of peace and war. The large one in the centre portrays a large figure of Minerva, goddess of wisdom, science and art. In her right hand she holds a figure of winged victory. Surmounting the entire figure is the crest of the university, surrounded by the words, "Dulce et decorum est pro patria mori." (It is sweet and proper to die for one's country", and at the foot the names of those who fell in the engagement: J. H. Mewburn, Malcolm Mackenzie and W. F. Tempest.

The window to the left shows a Roman student aroused from his work by the call to arms, with an inscription "Young men of very great and good prospects," and the one in the right pictures a Roman soldier in an attitude of defence, with the words, "They died fighting for their country."

SIR IAN HAMILTON GETS POSITION

He Will Take the Inspector-Generalship of Mediterranean Forces.

London, June 21.—The King and Queen have received Earl Grey.

Sir Ian Hamilton has been appointed to the Mediterranean inspector-generalship of the oversea forces.

Gen. French will be inspector-general of the home forces.

In the House of Commons, Rt. Hon. Col. Seeley, stating in respect to Canada's commercial treaties, that they were made with the full knowledge and consent of the Colonial Office, said that the same course would be adopted in respect to the other self-governing dominions. In the House of Lords, Lord Lucas stated that the oversea dominions would be asked at the next imperial conference whether they approved of the idea of inspection of their forces, by the commander-in-chief of the Mediterranean. Lord Crew emphasized the fact that there was no question in this country of sending an officer, however eminent, to inspect the self-governing dominions' forces, except on request of their respective Governments. The impression at the last colonial conference was that there was a real desire as far as possible to obtain uniformity of equipment and character of forces through the different parts of the Empire, and that the colonies would welcome such an inspection as suggested. It would not necessarily be a periodical inspection.

PAGEANT OF QUEEN'S OWN WAS A GREAT SUCCESS

The History of Canada in all Reigns Since Henry VII. is Vividly Portrayed in Celebration of Semi-Centennial of Regiment.

Toronto, June 21.—One who has never seen a pageant can form but a small idea of the magnificent splendor which attends the production of the Historic Pageant of Ontario in connection with the Queen's Own Rifles' semi-centennial reunion. The 1,200 people who took part in the first production of it last night in front of the grand stand in the Exhibition grounds, arrayed in their gorgeous costumes, provided a spectacle never before seen in Toronto.

The pageant proper is divided into four epochs, each representing a period in Ontario's history. At the opening of the first epoch, which covers the years 1783 to 1796, the United Empire Loyalists are seen arriving in Ontario, having been driven out of their own country. They pitch their tents and light their camp fires. Then Prince William Henry comes, and is cordially received by the Indians, who hold a war dance in his honor. Later Lieutenant-Governor John Graves Simcoe plants the flag of St. George by the shores of Lake Ontario, on the site of Little York, where Toronto now stands. Settlers arrive from Ireland, from Scotland, and from other European countries, and little sketches of their simple rural life are produced with good effect.

The principal events in the War of 1812 follow each other in rapid succession in the second epoch, which is the longest and decidedly the most stirring. In the battle of Queenston Heights Gen. Brock falls, and is seen carried off the field. After this battle Laura Secord makes her first appearance, hunting among the wounded on the field for her husband. The battle of Stony Creek follows with Laura Secord's famous act of heroism in taking the despatches of the United States soldiers to Gen. Fitzgibbon at Beaver Dams. After the Battle of Lundy's Lane there is a jump of 21 years to Montgomery's Tavern, near Toronto, in 1837, where William Mackenzie and other Reformers were gathered, the epoch ending with the appearance of British troops and the destruction of the tavern.

The scene changes to the west in the third epoch, showing incidents in the Northwest rebellion of 1885. The dissatisfaction among the Indians and halfbreed Red River settlers comes to a head, the murder of Scott takes place and later the Queen's Own Rifles and other Canadian and British troops are shown dealing with the rebels. In the battle of Cut Knife Creek fifty real Indians from the Brantford reserve take part.

In the last epoch a large piece of canvas scenery shows the Canadian gates and the Queen Victoria memorial statue outside Buckingham Palace, London, England, at the time of Queen Victoria's jubilee. The procession of Kings and Queens of England, who were contemporaneous with Canadian history, starting with Henry VII., gathered around the monument of Queen Victoria.

The pageant runs until Thursday and on Friday a grand reunion ball will take place.

WALTER ROSS WAS HANGED TO-DAY

Special to the Review.

North Bay, June 21—Walter Ross, the young Englishman convicted at the assizes here last April of the murder of Percy Parkinson, of Toronto, his chum, at Ramore, in the Temiskaming District, was hanged in the jail yard here this morning. Ross slept well last night and had to be roused at 5 a.m. for breakfast. He ate heartily. Ross walked to the scaffold unassisted. His neck was broken by the fall of the drop, and it was not until 13 1-2 minutes afterwards that the heart's action stopped. Only six persons witnessed the execution. Ross, in an interview before the execution, strongly protested his innocence of wilful murder, claiming he shot Parkinson in self-defence.

The executioner will officiate at Henderson's hanging in Peterborough on June 23rd.

DEFENDED THE KING

London, June 21.—The Dean of Norwich made a remarkable address in a church near Norwich, in which he referred to King George as "a man to my personal knowledge of intense self-sacrifice and of high character." He then mentioned "two accusations brought, as I think, by that part of society which is not society at all." He went on: Firstly, that the King is sometimes accused of insobriety. You may take me on undoubted authority that is a libel. So far as his close friends have noticed him he has never been intemperate throughout his life. On the contrary he is a man who, even from the point of view of health has to be abstemious. He does not desire to be anything else.

"The other accusation is still more unworthy, viz., that prior to his marriage to the present Queen he had what is called a secret or morgantic marriage, with children by it. That is absolutely, root and branch, an untruth."

MOTOR ACCIDENT CAUSES DEATH

Oshawa, June 21.—William Hall, an employe of the McLaughlin Motor Co., here, is dead, the result of an accident yesterday. It seems that Hall and "Corn" Scully were going about the third concession line, when the brake refused to operate. The car turned round and then upset upon Hall, while Scully jumped out of the way and sustained severe injury to his back. Scully is now under arrest, and an inquest will be held at once.

Ottawa, June 21.—The Department of Railways yesterday issued a call for tenders for the construction of the Quebec Bridge. Tenders are returnable up to September. They will be advertised in all leading engineering journals of Canada, the United States, Great Britain and Germany, and it is expected that practically every great bridge-building company in the world will submit a tender. The Dominion Bridge Co. of Montreal will, it is understood, make an effort to secure the contract, and the Krupps of Germany, who have the largest iron and steel construction plant in the world, will also tender."

Each tender must submit a guarantee bond of $1,000,000 to insure the Government against loss.

SPRING IN TRAU WAS POISONED

Vienna, June 21.—Poisoning of the waters of a spring near Trau, in Dalmatia, is responsible for the immediate death of three religious processionists, the probable fatal illness of 300 others, and the serious condition of at least another hundred.

The hospitals at Trau are to-day crowded with the victims of the poison.

Fifty of the processionists were placed under arrest yesterday charged with the murder of the attendant.

No clue to the poisoning has been found.

CAPT. ROLAND HAS BEEN FOUND

Port Arthur, June 21.—Captain Walpole Roland, the 83-year-old mining engineer, who strayed from a prospecting party one month ago in the Lake Manitou gold district, has been found. After subsisting on poplar leaves and water for 31 days, the marvelously strong will and constitution of the captain conquered, and he is to-day alive, and, excepting for being physical weak, is apparently none the worse. Attracted by birch bark parchments scattered prominently by the captain a Dominion Government geological survey party, under Dr. G. L. Parsons of Toronto, and Messrs. Thompson and Margurah, searched and found him about one mile from the trail from which he strayed.

MINE EXPLOSION COSTS TWO LIVES

Amherst, N.S., June 21.—Two lives were lost in a terrific explosion in the Chignecto Mine yesterday. The body of William Stevens, the examiner of the mines, was found last evening. TEN DROWNED OFF SKERRIES

La Rochelle is a big iron tramp freighter, and was cut almost in two when the vessels came together, sinking so rapidly that her engine room forces had no chance to escape. The others jumped into the sea and were picked up by the Yews and are being brought here.

ADVERTISE IN THE REVIEW.

SOLD HIS DAUGHTER FOR FIFTY DOLLARS

Ottawa, June 21.—High Constable Groulx of Hull, who has been on a tour of the Gatineau district, brought down a curious story of a father's bargaining with the highest bidder for the hand of his daughter. The man is Joe Menard. GENERAL PRAISED GUNNERS

Petawawa Camp, June 21.—"It is the first time I have seen Canadian militia artillerymen and I was delighted and very agreeably surprised with the work." This is what Gen. French had to say yesterday afternoon. "The men rode and handled the guns well. I was delighted especially at the spirit and energy of every one here. Every man seems anxious and as if he wanted to do his very best."

The general also expressed his approval of the camp, which he thought admirably situated for the purpose. He thought the purchase of more land adjoining would be a good move, if possible.

ROOSEVELT, JR., GETS MARRIED

New York, June 21.—Weather typical of the month of brides and roses attended the wedding day of Miss Eleanor Butler Alexander and Theodore Roosevelt, jr., whose nuptials at the Fifth avenue Presbyterian Church yesterday furnished one of the most notable society events of the season.

The church was beautifully decorated with pink and white blossoms in profusion, roses, lilies of the valley and peonies predominating.

The bride was given away in marriage by her mother, Mrs. Henry Addison Alexander. Kermit Roosevelt was his brother's best man.

The young couple have left on their honeymoon to California.

ASTRONOMICAL SOCIETY MEETING

An Hours Study of the Heavens—Interesting Astronomy Talks

A very interesting meeting of the Royal Astronomical Society will be held this evening at the Collegiate Institute.

From eigh until nine o'clock the meeting will be held in the lecutre room, and then adjourn to the lawn where a telescope will be set up. There for an hour or so the moon and Jupiter especially will be studied under actual observations.

These three addresses should prove very interesting, as each person will speak upon a theme with which he has had considerable practical experience.

For those members who have not as yet had the pleasure of seeing the moon and Jupiter through the telescope, a treat is in store for them, as these planets present a wonderful sight under close observation.

OUR LONGEST DAY

To-day is the longest day of the year. it hardly seems possible, but it is and the sun will soon slip the earlier to sleep. It will not be long till the sound of the thresher will be heard ,till the hazy day of autumn, and the leaves begin to color, till the Master Painter takes his great brush out of the attic of the skies to paint the ivy over the home of the poor man no less gorgeously than that which climbs the mansion of the rich. Almost ere we are aware, the fall will be here, the leaves will scatter and the birds will be gone. Then the coal man will take up the smile now worn by the ice man and the proprietor of the ice cream store.

HANGING

The Hamilton Herald says;—

Two proposals for the elimination of the hangman were made in Toronto yesterday. Canon Davidson gave notice in the Anglican synod that he will move that Parliament be asked "to speedily adopt some other means of execution less degrading in character and more in harmony with the instincts and customs of the present age." The Toronto Star protested against hanging because it makes necessary the employment of human being as an agent to take the life of another human being. The office of the hangman, the Star thinks, is "brutalizing," and should be abolished. It would substitute death by electric shock, the shock to come from a battery attached to an instrument so delicate that a single ray of light would set it whirling. Thus "the sun itself might be made the executioner," and the apparatus mentioned "at the first streak of dawn would strike down the murderer in his cell."

We cannot sympathize with this extreme sensitiveness. A hangman is merely an agent of the law, just as the crown lawyer who prosecutes the murderer, the jury which convicts him, the judge who sentences him, and the sheriff who is responsible for the execution of the sentence, are agents of the law. Each of these agents has a share in the process of putting the criminal to death; and the man who pulls the lever on the gallows really performs no more degrading office than does the judge who pronounces the culprit's doom. Both officials are doing public duty which must be done.

However, the Herald would favor the abolition of hanging and the substitution of some other mode of capital punishment, not because hanging is peculiarly degrading or brutalizing, but because there are other deathdealing processes which are less liable to be bungled in the hands of nervous or incompetent executioners. Death by hanging, when the execution is superintended by a cool and experienced executioner, is probably as painless a death as any. But nevertheless suffering has often been caused by the bungling of executioners who were neither cool nor experienced. The electric chair is more certain than the rope.

Hanging is at once brutal and barbaric. As a method of execution it is doomed, for public opinion is rising steadily against it.

In certain heathen tribes poison is offered the guilty one and death is sure and quick. Cyanide of potassium will produce instant death. Even this seems more human than the possibility of strangling on the end of a rope. If we have a dog we want to get rid of, that is vicious or old, we shoot the dog. Shooting also seems preferable to this drawing the lever and dropping through a trap door.

All forms of capital punishment, however, are ill in keeping with the age of churches, hospitals, forward movements, havens and rescue homes.

THE FIGHTING PARSONS

Rev. Robert Vanover and Rev. Isaac Perry, who were Baptist ministers of Roch Creek, Ky., fought with knives last Friday. The Reverend Robert is dead, with his throat cut by the Reverend Isaac. The fight took place over church matters. Fighting parsons are strewn here and there through history's pages, when sometimes men and sometimes timber wolves and sometimes bears interferred with the smooth working of the gospel. Going down by the River Don, late one night, homeward bound from the bed of a sick church member, a young parson of Toronto was accosted by a drunken man, who knocked his hat off and threatened to throw him in the river. When the parson got through, the drunk couldn't see very well out of one eye and his nose was bleeding. To-day he is a Baptist church deacon in Toronto and the parson who licked him says he is one of his most useful members.

THE RATTLESNAKE RAGOUT

In Paris, France, a society of epicures known as the Super-Gourmets have, according to a cable flashed under the ocean, just dined on stewed boa-constrictors and a fillet of African Gazelle. They also ate an omelette of ostrich eggs and roasted porcupine. There were numerous ladies present, for, as one fair guest naively observed, "Woman could never resist the serpent."

From the United States comes the telegraphic message of a man who has fasted 21 days, and who never felt stronger in his life.

From this distance the fasting man seems the more sensible.

The less one eats and drinks in warm weather the less he feels the heat and the brighter are his faculties. Two meals a day should be enough for the ordinary man whose labors are not physically excessive.

The horrors of drink are enlarged upon by many who practice and believe in total abstinence, but, the apostles of less food per day are very few.

Every hamlet and city have men who drink too much, but for every man who drinks too much there are a hundred who eat too much. Then we wonder why we are dull, why we have headaches and billious attacks, why we lack ambition and grow despondent.

When a man drinks too much he either acts like an ass ,or falls asleep. When he is a glutton he gets boils, rheumatism or a fever comes to purify him. There is a happy medium road in life which is very sparsely travelled.

TWO VICIOUS APPOINTMENTS

The Laurier Government has added two peculiarly indefensible appointments to its already long list. W. A Beddoe's case attracted much notice. The Ottawa Journal attacked the appointment charging that while in the Yukon Beddoe had been virtually convicted of attempted blackmail by a jury. So reputable a man as J. B. Tyrrell publicly asserted that Beddoe had tried to blackmail him. Beddoe brought suit, and the jury threw out the suit on the ground that Mr. Tyrrell had proved his case. The Journal recounted the story and repeatedly declared that Beddoe was unfit for the post. Beddoe did not dare to sue the newspaper ,but left the country hurriedly to proceed to New Zealand at $3,000 a year. Thus the Dominion of Canada is represented in New Zealand by a person whom a Canadian jury has pronounced a blackmailer, and who does not sue a Canadian newspaper which declares him morally unfit for the post.

The case of Alex. Johnston. Ex-M. M., also is bad. Mr Johnston was one of the three men who formed the Blocker's Brigade in the parliament which sat from 1904 to 1908. A peculiarly bitter partisan, he devoted himself to preventing the Conservatives in the Public Accounts Committee from detecting stealing in the Departments. At that time the Department of Marine and Fisheries was under constant investigation, and Mr. Mr. Johnston steadily tried to keep the lid on. In 1908 he was defeated by Mr. J. W. Maddin.

Mark what the Laurier Government does This is the chain of events:

1. The Marine and Fisheries Department is rotten with graft.
2. Mr. Johnston does his best to keep the graft from being exposed.
3. Through the Courtney Commission and the Cassels Commission the existence of the graft which Mr. Johnston sought to shield is abundantly proved.
4. Thereupon the Laurier Government appoints Mr. Johnston Deputy Minister of the same Department.
5. That is Laurier's way of handling graft.

A Wonderful Achievement

Discovery of "Fruit-a-tives" has meant health for all

Canada's fame does not rest solely on her furs and wheat fields. Her rise in the esteem of the world is not due to her Cobalt mines. It is the work of her great men that has made her great. A graduate of McGill University has won lasting renown for his original researches in the realms of Physics.

Everyone knows that fruit is wholesome, when eaten judiciously. Physicians generally recognize the fact that fruit juices have a beneficial effect on the various organs of the body.

It remained for a Canadian physician to discover a process whereby the medicinal action of fruit could be so increased as to make the intensified juices a wonderful cure.

"Fruit-a-tives" is this combination of fruit juices and tonics. Since its introduction to the public, "Fruit-a-tives" has met with a success accorded to no other medicine in the world. The reason is plain, "Fruit-a-tives" is the one remedy that is actually made of fruit, and is the only remedy that naturally cures Constipation, Biliousness, Indigestion, Headaches, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Backache, Kidney and Skin Troubles. At all dealers at 50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, or trial size, 25c., or from Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

Montreal Live Stock.

MONTREAL, June 20.—(Special)—At the Montreal Stock Yards, West End Market, an easier feeling developed in the market for cattle and prices were fully ¼c per lb. lower than a week ago, which is attributed to increased supplies, warm weather and the falling off in the consumption of beef.

A few extra choice stall-fed steers brought as high as 7¾c, but the offerings of such were limited and besides the demand was principally for choice stock, which sold at 7¼c, good at 6¾c to 7c, fairly good at 6¼c to 6½c, fair at 5¾c to 6c, and common at 5¼c to 5½c per lb. The market for bulls was quiet and sales were made at 5½c to 6c, with some extra choice ones held at 6¼c to 6½c per lb. There were a number of cows on the market, of which the bulk were of poor quality, and they met with a slow trade at 4¾c to 5½c per lb.

A steadier feeling prevailed in the market for hogs. Sales of selected lots were made at $9.75 to $10 per cwt., weighed off the cars.

A feature of the market for small meats was the scarcity of calves. Sales of some choice stock were made as high as $11 each, while the commoner ones sold from that down to $3 each. The trade in sheep and lambs was fair and prices show no change. Old sheep sold at 5c per lb., and spring lambs at from $4 to $7 each.

Try the Taste Test On Mooney's Sugar Wafers

Forget for a moment that Mooney's Sugar Wafers are made in the finest sunlit sanitary factory in the country. Forget, also, for a moment that a little finer flour—a little richer butter—a little better fruit—a little more care in baking are all important details of the Mooney Method of biscuit making.

NOW base your opinion of Mooney's Sugar Wafers solely on their taste. We are confident as to the outcome of this test.

The Dessert Shipped In Private Cars

That's the way the delicious flavor of Mooney's Sugar Wafers is preserved from the ovens to your table. It's expensive for us—but better for the Sugar Wafers.

The cars are especially constructed, so when traveling from Province to Province, the temperature is always uniform. We are the only biscuit company in Canada shipping its goods in its own cars. The Sugar Wafers keep flaky and fresh—crisp and whole. Their enticing flavor is retained to the last crumb.

The Mystery of The Yellow Room

By GASTON LEROUX

COPYRIGHT, 1908, BY BRENTANO'S

"What makes you think that?" I asked, "since these footmarks are not continued on the path?"

"What makes me think that? Why, these footprints, which I expected to find!" he cried, pointing to the sharply outlined imprint of a neat boot. "See!" And he called to Frederic Larsan.

"M. Fred, these neat footprints seem to have been made since the discovery of the crime."

"Yes, young man, yes. They have been carefully made," replied Fred without raising his head. "You see, there are steps that come and steps that go back."

"And the man had a bicycle!" cried the reporter.

Here, after looking at the marks of the bicycle, which followed, going and coming, the neat footprints, I thought I might intervene.

"The bicycle explains the disappearance of the murderer's big footprints," I said. "The murderer, with his rough boots, mounted a bicycle. His accomplice, the wearer of the neat boots, had come to wait for him on the edge of the lake with the bicycle. It might be supposed that the murderer was working for the other."

"No, no!" replied Rouletabille, with a strange smile. "I have expected to find these footmarks from the very beginning. These are not the footmarks of the murderer."

"Then there were two?"

"No; there was but one, and he had no accomplice."

"Very good! Very good!" cried Frederic Larsan.

"Look!" continued the young reporter, showing us the ground where it had been disturbed by big and heavy heels. "The man seated himself there and took off his hobnailed boots which he had worn only for the purpose of misleading detection, and then no doubt, taking them away with him, he stood up in his own boots and quietly and slowly regained the high road, holding his bicycle in his hand, for he could not venture to ride it on this rough path. That accounts for the lightness of the impression made by the wheels along it in spite of the softness of the ground. If there had been a man on the bicycle the wheels would have sunk deeply into the soil. No, no; there was but one man there—the murderer on foot."

"Bravo! Bravo!" cried Fred again. And, coming suddenly toward us and planting himself in front of M. Robert Darzac, he said to him:

"If we had a bicycle here we might demonstrate the correctness of the young man's reasoning, M. Robert Darzac. Do you know whether there is one at the chateau?"

"No," replied M. Darzac, "there is not. I took mine four days ago to Paris, the last time I came to the chateau before the crime."

"That's a pity," replied Fred very coldly. Then, turning to Rouletabille, he said: "If we go on at this rate we'll both come to the same conclusion. Have you any idea as to how the murderer got away from the yellow room?"

"Yes," said my young friend, "I have an idea."

"So have I," said Fred, "and it must be the same as yours. There are no two ways of reasoning in this affair. I am waiting for the arrival of my chief before offering any explanation to the examining magistrate."

"Ah! Is the chief of the police coming?"

"Yes, this afternoon. He is going to summon before the magistrate in the laboratory all those who have played any part in this tragedy. It will be very interesting. It is a pity you won't be able to be present."

"I shall be present," said Rouletabille confidently.

"Really you are an extraordinary fellow for your age!" replied the detective in a tone not wholly free from irony. "You'd make a wonderful detective—if you had a little more method—if you didn't follow your instincts and that bump on your forehead. As I have already several times observed, M. Rouletabille, you reason too much. You do not allow yourself to be guided by what you have seen. What do you say to the handkerchief full of blood and the red mark of the hand on the wall? You have seen the stain on the wall, but I have only seen the handkerchief."

"Bah!" cried Rouletabille. "The murderer was wounded in the hand by Mlle. Stangerson's revolver."

"Defective observation—defective observation! The examination of the handkerchief, the numberless little round scarlet stains, the impression of drops which I found in the tracks of the footprints at the moment when they were made on the floor, prove to me that the murderer was not wounded at all. M. Rouletabille, the murderer bled at the nose!"

The great Fred spoke quite seriously. However, I could not refrain from uttering an exclamation.

The reporter looked gravely at Fred, who looked gravely at him. And Fred immediately concluded:

"The man allowed the blood to flow into his hand and handkerchief and dried his hand on the wall. The fact is highly important," he added, "because there is no need of his being wounded in the hand for him to be the murderer."

Rouletabille seemed to be thinking deeply. After a moment he said:

"There is something—a something, M. Frederic Larsan, much graver than the misuse of logic, the disposition of mind in some detectives which makes them in perfect good faith twist logic to the necessities of their preconceived ideas. Beware of judicial error, M. Fred; it will trip you up."

And, laughing a little in a slightly bantering tone, his hands in his pockets, Rouletabille fixed his cunning eyes on the great Fred.

Frederic Larsan silently contemplated the young reporter who pretended to be as wise as himself. Shrugging his shoulders, he bowed to us and moved quickly away, hitting the stones on his path with his stout cane.

Rouletabille watched his retreat and then turned toward us, his face joyous and triumphant.

"I shall beat him!" he cried. "I shall beat the great Fred, clever as he is! I shall beat them all!"

And he danced a double shuffle. Suddenly he stopped. My eyes followed his gaze. They were fixed on M. Robert Darzac, who was looking anxiously at the impression left by his feet side by side with the elegant footmarks. There was not a particle of difference between them!

We thought he was about to faint. His eyes, bulging with terror, avoided us, while his right hand, with a spasmodic movement, twitched at the beard that covered his honest, gentle and now despairing face. At length regaining his self possession, he bowed to us and, remarking in a changed voice that he was obliged to return to the chateau, left us.

"The deuce!" exclaimed Rouletabille.

He also appeared to be deeply concerned. From his pocketbook he took a piece of white paper, as I had seen him do before, and with his scissors cut out the shape of the neat bootmarks that were on the ground. Then he fitted the new paper pattern with the one he had previously made. The two were exactly alike. Rising, Rouletabille exclaimed suddenly, "The deuce!" Presently he added, "Yet I believe M. Robert Darzac to be an honest man." He then led me on the road to the Donjon inn, which we could see on the highway by the side of a small clump of trees.

CHAPTER X.

"We Shall Have to Eat Red Meat—Now."

THE Donjon inn was at least two centuries old, perhaps older. Under its signboard over the threshold a man with a crabbed looking face was standing, seemingly plunged in unpleasant thought, if the wrinkles on his forehead and the knitting of his brows were any indication.

When Rouletabille and I were close to him he deigned to see us and asked us in a tone anything but engaging whether we wanted anything. He was no doubt the not very amiable landlord of this charming dwelling place. As we expressed a hope that he would be good enough to furnish us with a breakfast, he assured us that he had no provisions.

"You may take us in," Rouletabille said to him. "We are not policemen."

"I'm not afraid of the police. I'm not afraid of any one," replied the man.

I had made my friend understand by a sign that we should do better not to insist; but, being determined to enter the inn, he slipped by the man on the doorstep and was in the common room.

"Come on," he said. "It is very comfortable here."

A good fire was blazing in the chimney, and we held our hands to the warmth it sent out. It was a morning in which the approach of winter was unmistakable. The room was a tolerably large one, furnished with two heavy tables, some stools, a counter decorated with rows of bottles of sirup and alcohol.

"That's a fine fire for roasting a chicken," said Rouletabille.

"We have no chicken, not even a wretched rabbit," said the landlord.

"I know," said my friend slowly—"I know. We shall have to eat red meat now."

"I confess I did not in the least understand what Rouletabille meant by what he had said, but the landlord as soon as he heard the words uttered an oath, which he at once stifled, and placed himself at our orders as obediently as M. Robert Darzac had done when he heard Rouletabille's mysterious sentence, "The presbytery has lost nothing of its charm nor the garden its brightness."

The man pushed open a little side door and called to somebody to bring him half a dozen eggs and a piece of beefsteak. The commission was quickly executed by a strongly built young woman with beautiful blond hair and large, handsome eyes, who regarded us with curiosity.

The innkeeper said to her roughly:

"Get out, and if the Green Man comes don't let me see him!"

She disappeared. Rouletabille took the eggs, which had been brought to him in a bowl, and the meat, which was on a dish, placed all carefully beside him in the chimney, unhooked a frying pan and a gridiron and began to beat up our omelet before proceeding to grill our beefsteak. He then ordered two bottles of cider and seemed to take as little notice of our host as our host did of him. The landlord let us do our own cooking and set our table near one of the windows.

Suddenly I heard him mutter:

"Ah, there he is!"

His face had changed, expressing fierce hatred. He went and glued himself to one of the windows, watching the road. There was no need for me to draw Rouletabille's attention. He had already left our omelet and had joined the landlord at the window. I went with him.

A man dressed entirely in green velvet, his head covered with a huntsman's cap of the same color, was advancing leisurely, lighting a pipe as he walked. He carried a fowling piece slung at his back. His movements displayed an almost aristocratic ease. He wore eyeglasses and appeared to be about five and forty years of age. His hair as well as his mustache were salt gray. He was remarkably handsome. As he passed near the inn he hesitated, as if asking himself whether or no he should enter it, gave a glance toward us, took a few whiffs at his pipe and then resumed his walk at the same nonchalant pace.

Rouletabille and I looked at our host. His flashing eyes, his clinched hands, his trembling lips, told us of his tumultuous feelings.

"He has done well not to come in here today!" he hissed.

"Who is that man?" asked Rouletabille, returning to his omelette.

"The Green Man," growled the innkeeper. "Don't you know him? Then all the better for you. He is not an acquaintance to make. Well, he is M. Stangerson's forest keeper."

"You don't appear to like him very much?" asked the reporter, pouring his omelet into the frying pan.

"Nobody likes him, monsieur. He's an upstart, who must once have had a fortune of his own, and he forgives nobody because in order to live he has been compelled to become a servant. A keeper is as much a servant as any other, isn't he? Upon my word, one would say that he is the master of the Glandier and that all the land and woods belong to him. He'll not let a poor creature eat a morsel of bread on the grass—his grass!"

"Does he often come here?"

"Too often. But I've made him understand that his face doesn't please me, and for a month past he hasn't been here. The Donjon inn has never existed for him! He hasn't had time—been too much engaged in paying court to the landlady of the Three Lilies at Saint Michel. A bad fellow! There isn't an honest man who can bear him. Why, the concierges of the chateau would turn their eyes away from a picture of him!"

"The concierges of the chateau are honest people then?"

"Yes, they are, as true as my name's Mathieu, monsieur. I believe them to be honest."

"Yet they've been arrested?"

"What does that prove? But I don't want to mix myself up in other people's affairs."

"And what do you think of the affair?"

"Of the attack on poor Mlle. Stangerson? A good girl. Much loved everywhere in the country. That's what I think of it—and many things besides. But that's nobody's business."

"Not even mine?" insisted Rouletabille.

The innkeeper looked at him sideways and said gruffly:

"Not even yours."

The omelet ready, we sat down at table and were silently eating when the door was pushed open and an old woman, dressed in rags, leaning on a stick, her head doddering, her white hair hanging loosely over her wrinkled forehead, appeared on the threshold.

"Ah, there you are, Mother Angenoux! It's long since we saw you last," said our host.

"I have been very ill, very nearly dying," said the old woman. "If ever you should have any scraps for the Bete du Bon Dieu"—

And she entered, followed by a cat larger than any I had ever believed could exist. The beast looked at us and gave so hopeless a miau that I shuddered. I had never heard so lugubrious a cry.

As if drawn by the cat's cry a man followed the old woman in. It was the Green Man. He saluted by raising his hand to his cap and seated himself at a table near to ours.

"A glass of cider, Daddy Mathieu," he said.

As the Green Man entered Daddy Mathieu had started violently, but visibly mastering himself he said:

"I've not more cider. I served the last bottles to these gentlemen."

"Then give me a glass of white wine," said the Green Man without showing the least surprise.

"I've no more white wine—no more anything," said Daddy Mathieu surlily.

"How is Mme. Mathieu?"

"Quite well, thank you."

So the young woman with the large, tender eyes whom we had just seen was the wife of this repugnant and brutal rustic, whose jealousy seemed to emphasize his physical ugliness.

Slamming the door behind him, the innkeeper left the room. Mother Angenoux was still standing, leaning on her stick, the cat at her feet.

"You've been ill, Mother Angenoux? Is that why we have not seen you for the last week?" asked the Green Man.

"Yes, M. Keeper. I have been able to get up but three times to go to pray to St. Genevieve, our good patroness, and the rest of the time I have been lying on my bed. There was no one to care for me but the Bete du Bon Dieu!"

"Did she not leave you?"

"Neither by day nor by night."

"Are you sure of that?"

"As I am of paradise."

"Then how was it, Mme. Angenoux, that all through the night of the murder nothing but the cry of the Bete du Bon Dieu was heard?"

Mother Angenoux planted herself in front of the forest keeper and struck the floor with her stick.

"I don't know anything about it," she said. "But shall I tell you something? There are no two cats in the world that cry like that. Well, on the night of the murder I also heard the cry of the Bete du Bon Dieu outside and yet she was on my knees and did not mew once, I swear. I crossed myself when I heard that, as if I had heard the devil."

THE CITY WANTS IMMUNITY FROM ANY EXPENDITURE

In Connection With Quaker Oats Siding When Frog is Removed for Simcoe Street Extension—Several Communications Dealt With

The Board of Works had a busy, warm weather session last night.

Mrs. Thomas Lush made application for sewer connection for 193 Smith street. This was granted on condition that she pay $25, and that she will not oppose the building of a sewer on Smith street.

Mr. David Henry made application for the construction of a crossing on South Park street at Parnell street. The crossing will be constructed when work is being done in that part of the city.

Bolivar street will be rolled and graded as recommended in the city engineer's report.

No action was taken in regard to a request to remove the standpipe on Aylmer street at Wolfe, and the new one on Gilmour street will be placed at St. Thomas street.

In connection with a request from Mr. D. W. Dumble, the board decided that the city would assume King Edward street if Mr. Dumble filled in a cellar excavation on the street.

J. Hooy, Dublin street, wanted permission to remove a tree in front of his place, as the tree would be right in line with the granolithic walk, he claimed, if the walk were built in front of his house. This was referred to the city engineer.

F. C. Dobbin requested that a road be built from Rogers street north of the Crowley property to the railway track. The engineer will report on this.

The stone crusher will be moved to the bed of the river above Rogers street, and will be operated there.

Five hundred dollars will be added to the Board of Works' appropriation for streets.

Repairs will be made on Dalhousie street, from Aylmer to the creek.

The portable engine of the steam crusher will be sold, as the machine is now operated by electric power.

QUAKER OATS SPUR LINE.

Mr. W. H. Denham, superintendent of the Quaker Oats Co., again waited on the board in regard to the C.P.R. spur line to the company's mills.

On motion of Ald. Metheral and Ald. Duncan, it was carried that the Quaker Oats Co. be granted permission for the construction of a spur line across Simcoe street and the Government reserve, providing that when the city opens up Simcoe street to the river the frog is removed and the city guaranteed by the Quaker Oats Co. against the cost of such removal.

Mr. H. O. LaPlante would set no price on his property, a three-cornered lot between the G.T.R. and George street, which is under consideration as a pumping station for the south end. He will report later as to the price he would want.

The board meets again on Friday.

THE RAISING OF PRICE OF DOG TAGS IS LEGAL

In the Mail and Empire on Saturday there appeared a query in which the writer stated that the Peterborough council had raised the dog tax from $2 and $1 to $3 and $5, and the correspondent wanted to know if this was legal.

The reply was as follows: "Municipal councils have the right to pass by-laws for tax on dogs, and for restraining dogs from running at large upon the public streets and highways and for killing dogs found running at large contrary to the by-law."

SHAM BATTLE WAS A DRAW ANOTHER FIGHT LATER

Jackson Park last night resembled a field of battle. It was a bloodless affray, and when dusk had closed in on the combatants the casualities, as far as could be learned by a Review war correspondent, were nil.

At 7.30 a detachment consisting of the Bugle Band, the Boy Scouts, and a company of picked men of the 57th Regiment, numbering fifty strong, left their quarters at the armories, and marched out to Jackson Park. Captain McLean, who was in charge, placed his men in an advantageous position in the thick bushes that cover the ground at the foot of the hill in the centre of the park.

Soon the enemy, a second detachment from the regiment, appeared, sixty strong, under Captain Higgins, preceded by the Regimental Band, which played inspiring music to encourage the attacking force.

The flash of a rifle revealed the location of the ambushed party, and instantly the air was full of the smoke and din of combat.

The Bugle Band, being non-combatants, calmly lay down and had a sleep, or passed the time in conversation with the fair spectators, who had assembled to witness the spectacle.

The battle raged from eight till nine o'clock, after which a truce was permitted. Both armies decided to discontinue hostilities until a date that will be announced later.

The battle scarred and smoke begrimed soldiers then fell in and paraded back to the armories, arriving there about 9.30.

THE LAKEFIELD C.O.F. HAD PLEASANT EXCURSION

Ideal weather conditions favored the annual excursion of the Lakefield (St. Paul's) Court, C.O.F., yesterday. A very large party travelled from Lakefield and Young's Point, and the morning train from Peterborough swelled the contingent, bringing, amongst others, Rev Father Meagher and Rev. Father [illegible] of the Cathedral, Rev. Father [illegible], and Rev. Father Bretherton, Hastings. Father Phelan had everything well in hand, and punctually at 9.30 the steamer "Islander" left her moorings. It was an ideal day for the trip, the gentle breeze from the waters being alleviating to the intense heat. The party went ashore at Crowe's Landing, where dinner was partaken of. In the afternoon athletic sports were held, an item decidedly favored by the juvenile elements. The more energetic of the party tripped the light fantastic and altogether the day passed very pleasantly for all.

Father Phelan should feel satisfied with the success attending this annual Lakefield day, and all those who enjoyed yesterday's outing must realize that there is added one more item to the lengthy list of obligations they owe him.

The name of the plant, however, will in future be known as the Lundy Shovel Company, of Peterborough, and will be under the direct management of Mr. D. J. Lundy.

Mr. Lundy has just completed negotiations for the purchase of the works, and as an evidence to the fact that operations will be conducted on a large scale Mr. Lundy told the Review to-day that the building would be enlarged in the near future and very best of machinery and tools installed.

THE WEATHER MAN IS ILL

We thought as much! Only last week we had on our winter underwear, now we want to cast everything wearable to the winds. The public will be glad to hear that Mr. Walter Peters has been appointed weather man pro tem. Mr. Peters holds office as treasurer of the local printers' organization and cheerfully says that there is now no just cause or impediment why the printers' picnic on Saturday afternoon next, should not be favored with the finest brand of weather. So, come along. Tickets now on sale. Adults 85 cents, children 45 cents. Any printer you meet on the street with a smile exceedingly broad, he is a man with tickets for sale. Ask him for one—more than one if you desire—there is no objection.

ROBERT HENDERSON HAS SEEN A GREAT DEAL OF THE WORLD AND IS A YOUTH OF EXCELLENT EDUCATION AND KEEN INTELLECT

Young Man Under Sentence to Die on Thursday Received Good Schooling in Old Country—Is An Adept at French and English Composition—Mother His Only Source of Worry—Something of His Life.

Now that the Court of Appeal has refused to interfere, the time is at hand when Robert Henderson must pay the penalty of his crime, the unusually vicious and cowardly crime he committed when he inflicted fatal injuries on Margaret McPherson, the 74-year-old woman whom he brutally clubbed to insensibility with an axe, after which he attacked her sister, Susana McPherson, ten years her junior, in the same manner.

Henderson is an interesting youth. This may be said in all truth in spite of the revolting nature of his crime. He is not an ordinary criminal by any means. He is not the low browed thug that one would believe would be guilty of such an act. And he is not a man hardened and made desperate by long years of persecution.

HAS GOOD EDUCATION.

While the medical experts say this boy has no sense of moral responsibility—is utterly indifferent to right or wrong—in other ways he is very intelligent and shrewd, remarkably so for one only seventeen years of age. He is bright and alert and his life history—as much of it as can be learned—reads like a romance.

Henderson's family were apparently people of some standing, for the lad's education has been well attended to. He received a good schooling and attended the Lady Margaret Vernon School in England, and also a school in West Hartlepool, in the same country. He also shows evidence of considerable musical talent, and for five years was a boy chorister in the Old Country.

A GLOBE TROTTER.

This much of Henderson's life is stated on the foundation of fact, and it is evident that from his first hand familiarity of different parts of the world that he has travelled widely and been in Australia, India and other countries. From his intimacy with nautical matters it would seem also that he had served before the mast. He knows a great deal and has seen a lot for a youth of his immature years.

EXCELLENT KNOWLEDGE OF FRENCH.

He writes letters in the jail and his penmanship is well defined and graceful. His command of the language is not confined to English alone. He writes fluently and accurately in French—correct grammatical French. A short time ago he was penning a letter in French to a girl of his acquaintance in Australia, and the composition, as in the case with all his letters, whether in French or English, was intelligent and interesting.

TAKES COLDLY PHILOSOPHICAL VIEW.

Henderson doesn't fear death. At least from his present attitude he doesn't. He has been in perilous situations many times in his wanderings and this, combined with his unusually fearless nature, seems to have made him philosophical in regard to his fate. He has expressed the opinion in the jail that he had to die and might as well die in one way as another.

HIS ONE SOURCE OF WORRY.

But here is one thing that is worrying Henderson, a thing that has never been made public before, and the source of that worry is the solicitude he has developed for his widowed mother, who lives in West Hartelpool. As far as he is personally concerned he seems utterly indifferent to his fate but from his conversation it is quite evident that he appreciates and regrets the keen sorrow and disgrace his sentence to a death on the scaffold has brought upon his mother.

Printers' Pie

"Printers' pie" is a term given to the muddle a type makes when a line of letters suddenly spring from order into chaos—more or less to the disgust of the "knight of the stick" concerned. Well, on Saturday afternoon next there is going to be a scarcity of printers' pie about this city, for all the printers and their friends are going to Cobourg for a good time. There may possibly be a supply of this non-toothsome article on Monday, but on the perusal of the joyous events as recorded on Saturday's fete, this will be granted as excusable.

To the Editor of the Review:

Sir,—Let me call the attention of Methodists, and of the public generally to "John Sanderson the First" (just published) a biographical sketch by his daughter, of a man who was "faithful unto the end." The book preserves the simplicity and spirit of the man, his life and his times to an uncommon degree. The people of the "olden time" will read this book with infinite satisfaction.

Yours,
A READER.

MR. F. D. KERR'S ARGUMENT ON BEHALF OF HENDERSON

Jury Was Wrongfully and Improperly Interfered With in Exercise of Its Highest Function Was the Claim of Counsel for Condemned Youth

Toronto Telegram.

That the Court of Appeal is not justified in interfering in the case of Robert Henderson, sentenced to be hanged on June 23rd for the murder of Margaret McPherson, near Peterborough, was the decision reached by that court this morning. Chief Justice Moss, with Justices Garrow, Maclaren, Magee and Teetzel, formed the bench.

F. D. Kerr, of Peterborough, argued for Robert Henderson that Judge Riddell had been guilty of a breach of law which has been in force in Canada since 1792 when he recalled the jury after they had been out only one hour.

INTERFERED WITH JURY.

"The jury was wrongfully and improperly interfered with in the exercise of its highest functions," declared Mr. Kerr.

"The courts," he continued, "are bound by established principles which have come down to us through the ages. A judge has no power to interfere with the privilege of untramelled deliberation on a case. The jury gets the idea that the judge thinks they are too slow."

Mr. Kerr contended that Mr. Justice Riddell had erred and misdirected the jury on several occasions in charging that it was necessary for the defence to prove insanity "beyond reasonable doubt." The proper course was to hold that insanity might be established by a preponderance of evidence.

Chief Justice Moss—"Who are to be the judges of the preponderance?"

Mr. Kerr—"The jurors."

Chief Justice Moss—"Yes."

SATISFACTION AND DOUBT.

Mr. Kerr held that when insanity had been demonstrated to the satisfaction of the jurors, they were not to be held up by the term "beyond reasonable doubt."

Chief Justice Moss—"'To their satisfaction' means 'beyond reasonable doubt' does it not? If there is reasonable doubt they would not be satisfied."

Mr. Kerr quoted the statute as using the words "to their satisfaction," and said:—

"This is a life line thrown to the criminal; it should not be used as a rope to drag him to the gallows."

Chief Justice Moss—"Is a thing proved at all if there is a reasonable doubt to the contrary?"

Mr. Kerr—"That is a matter of metaphysics, perhaps."

Chief Justice Moss—"No."

Mr. Kerr—"Every day men come to conclusions on things they cannot see. They say 'This is my honest conclusion; I hope I am right.'"

Mr. Kerr was sharply stopped by the court when he spoke of the medical evidence coming from the "camp of the enemy."

"You should not speak of the Crown in that manner," said the chief justice. "The doctors were not retained to mak eup a case."

J. R. Cartwright, for the Attorney-General, made no reply.

FIGHTING FOR HIS CLIENT

MR. F. D. KERR IS IN OTTAWA TO-DAY AND IS MAKING AN EFFORT TO HAVE THE GOVERNMENT GRANT HENDERSON A REPRIEVE.

THE CABINET COUNCIL WILL MEET THIS AFTERNOON FOR THE PURPOSE OF RE-CONSIDERING THE CASE.

THE DEATH OF RICHARD WHITE

President Montreal Gazette Printing Co.--Founded the Review

Special to the Review.

Montreal, June 21.—Richard White, president of the Montreal Gazette Printing Co., publishers of the Gazette, the only English morning paper in Montreal, died this morning. Mr. White, who had been in failing health for some time, was one of the best known newspaper men in Canada, having been associated for many years with his brother, the late Hon. Thos. White. He was born in Quebec in 1833, and in 1856 established the Peterborough Review. Later the brothers purchased the Hamilton Spectator and came to Montreal in 1870 and purchased the Gazette.

HOW THE DEAF ARE MADE TO HEAR

M. D. Tugendhaft, the celebrated Ear and Eye Specialist, of New York City, will visit the town and will be at the Oriental Hotel, Peterborough on the following dates:—Thursday, June 30th; Friday and Saturday, July 1st and 2nd, at which he will demonstrate his wonderful Patent Invincible Ear Drum. Any person afflicted with deafness can be made to hear as well as ever. This is no idle boast. In the past few years there have been several Ear Drum Cures, and not only have they proved defective and of no use in restoring hearing, but were also clumsy and could be seen in the ear.

The Invincible Ear Drum of Tugendhaft's is entirely different in this respect. Not only will it restore the hearing, but is entirely invisible, and cannot be seen when once introduced into the ears.

Mr. Tugendhaft has once been deaf, and after squandering a small fortune on different remedies and on so-called inventions, finally perfected his new drum within the past few years. In every case where his drum has been used it has affected a complete cure.

See the celebrated specialist at once and be convinced. No drugs used or no operation necessary. This drum also stops all ringing noises and neuralgic pains in the head, where the cause is from deafness. The price of the Ear Drum is within reach of all, and any person afflicted with deafness need not be so any longer. 1d1w

LIVE NOTES FROM NORWOOD

Special to the Review.

Norwood, June 20.—On Wednesday afternoon last a wedding was solemnized by the Rev. B. W. Tucker, at the parsonage here, when Mrs. Chas. Buck, of Norwood, and Mr. Faux, of Villiers, took upno themselves the vows of holy matrimony. Mr. and Mrs. Faux left on the afternoon train for Toronto and other points west, where they will spend a short honeymoon, after which they will reside in Norwood.

Mr. W. C Harrison has his men engaged in changing the street lighting system in Norwood. The old arc lights are being replaced by power incandescent lights, which are being distributed over the village so that in future all streets will have their quota of lights, which will be more pleasant and agreeable to pedestrians. There will be about three of the new lights for one of the old ones, and judging from the ones already installed, will be highly satisfactory to the citizens.

SOME BIG CATCHES.

A few of our people spent the 10th at the lake trying for the fish, but all report very poor luck. Those, however, who took in the Trent River experienced some of the joys of the fishermen. Although the weather was extremely hot, yet the fish were out looking for treats, and some at least appeared to appreciate what Norwoodites had to offer them.

Norwood people are beginning to lay plans and make preparations for their summer outings at Stoney Lake. Several families will move out this week, and by the first of July nearly all will be gone out who spend their vacation in that way.

Messrs. H. McLaughlin and Hugh Beckett, M. R. Callander and J. Dickens, S. Hendren and E. J. Laing, captured seventeen 'lunge, ranging from four to twelve pounds, besides a few nice bass.

A big crowd of fishermen visited the waters of the Trent at the Narrows on the 18th, and nearly all appeared to have fair success with the fish, although no large catches were reported, neither were any of the fish taken very large. Mr. H. McLaughlin, of Norwood, got one weighing about twelve pounds, and I was almost forgetting to mention Mr. R. C. got one. No, nearly got one, that is had one that just made his line go Kr-r-r, Luish, Zip, but he got off. This is so, for J. D. will back up what we say.

Rev. Mr. Mellor, of South Dummer, preached in the Methodist church here on Sunday evening.

Mr. and Mrs. T. Watson took in the excursion to Niagara Falls on Saturday last.

Mr. John Hendren, who has been in the Northwest for the past six weeks returned home on Saturday evening.

The L.O.L. social and entertainment at South Dummer last Friday evening was a decided success. The proceeds amounted to over fifty dollars.

The Baptist Sunday school annual picnic will be held in Dummer on July 1st.

The High and Public schools will close on Tuesday afternoon this week after which the entrance and departmental examinations will be held.

PERSONAL.

Mr. Thomas Waller is working for B. F. Ackerman Company, Peterborough.

Miss Peters, of Peterborough, visited friends in Norwood on Sunday.

Mr. Thos. Morrison, who has been very ill for the past three weeks, is reported to be somewhat improving.

Quite a large contingent left Norwood for the west last Tuesday morning, including Messrs. J. M. Rork, Robt. Stewart, John Weir, W. B. Leverette, John Marks, Tom. Brown, Mr. and Mrs. Wellington Drain, M. Girven. Most of the party will be on the look out for suitable chances in business, while others are going just to see the sights of the far-famed Canadian Northwest. Dr. Stewart will go to the coast. Mr. Lou Brown will visit Fort George, while the others will take in Calgary, Edmonton and other places of interest.

Mr. and Mrs. Stevens and son from the west, are visiting at the home of Mr. and Mrs. A. Kemp.

Miss Lodemia Johnston, accompanied by Miss Rose Davidson, of Havelock, attended the Foresters' picnic to Niagara Falls on the 18th.

Misses Richards and McPherson, of Ottawa, spent last week in town, the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Woolcombe.

Miss Vida M. Wilkins, daughter of Mr. F. N. Wilkins, of this place, has just completed her four years' art course. Her numerous friends in town were pleased to see her name among the list of honor graduates in B. A., at the University of Toronto. Since returning home she has been receiving the warm congratulations of her numerous friends.

A QUEEN OF FINANCE

HETTY GREEN IS ABOUT TO RETIRE FROM BUSINESS.

The Richest and Shrewdest Woman Money-lender In the World Thinks It Is About Time to Settle Down to a Quiet Old Age—Some of Her Queer Characteristics—Was Grandfather's Secretary.

Mrs. Hetty Green, celebrated for years as the richest and shrewdest business woman in the world, will soon retire from active life and turn over the handling of the bulk of her immense fortune of $60,000,000 to her daughter, Sylvia, now Mrs. Matthew Astor Wilks. Mrs. Green is now 73 years old and for months past her health has been failing. Rarely does she appear at her office in the Chemical National Bank, New York, and when she does her feeble appearance indicates that her physical powers will soon be inadequate to the handling of her vast property interests. She lacks the snap and dash in managing her affairs that characterized her in the past, although her shrewdness is still on guard. One of the regrets of the aged woman, whose whole life has been devoted principally to the accumulation of dollars, is the non-inclination of her son, E. H. R. Green, to become as famous a financier as herself. Sylvia, the daughter, or to give her the name by marriage she bears, Mrs. Wilks, takes more after her mother in financial matters and hence will have control of the bulk of the fortune.

Hetty Green's name will long survive in the world of finance. She was born with a gold spoon in her mouth. Her father was Edward M. Robinson, a master whaler of New Bedford, and when he died in 1865 he left Hetty $1,000,000 in her own right and $9,000,000 in trust for his descendants. Hetty was much sought after in the matrimonial market. Finally she married Edward A. Green, a millionaire by virtue of his trading operations in the East Indies, and she carefully made an ante-nuptial agreement, under which her husband must support her and their children and must not touch a dollar of her money. She felt that she could attend to the handling of her money and she did attend to it, with a judgment, caution and self-reliance which have won the praise of the greatest financiers. And it was well for her that she did. Her husband eventually lost practically all his fortune, the direct avenue of loss being stock operations. His health failed him, so that for years he continued a chronic invalid in the Green homestead at Bellows Falls, Vt., where he finally died in 1902.

Soon after her marriage Mrs. Green's fortune was increased through the death of an aunt, who left her $4,000,000, and with this and the $1,000,000 left her by her father she has accumulated at least $60,000,000.

Mrs. Green is noted for many things, chief among which are her parsimony and her litigious spirit. She dresses shabbily, or at least shabbily for a person of her means, and lives on homely fare. When her son was a lad he had to wear clothes which were patched and his mother always required him to sell the morning paper after it had been read. Hetty has a horror of paying taxes. She has never been on the tax roll of New York, because the assessors could never find her residence. To avoid taxation she moves from pillar to post, no matter at what inconvenience, and has often lived under assumed names the better to protect her wealth. Latterly she has been occupying a $19 flat in Hoboken and probably thinks that this monthly rental is too high.

All her life Mrs. Green has been involved in one lawsuit or another, many of them being in connection with the estate left by her father. Her suits have extended from ocean to ocean and she has met and defeated more men, light-weights and heavy-weights, in physique and intellect, than all the living pugilists from Sullivan to Jeffries. She boasts that she is the only woman in the country who ever won a suit against the late C. P. Huntington. Of all the lawyers in the country, she hates most "Joe Choate," as she calls the ex-ambassador to England. Mr. Choate has figured prominently in litigation against her, and he has always managed to get a certain amount of rather unchivalrous humor out of her clothes. Being a woman, she has not forgotten this. Hetty was reared a Quaker and says that she was taught that to condone a crime is to share the responsibility of evil-doing. Hence her fighting spirit.

Hetty has been connected with financial matters since her babyhood. As soon as she had learned to read she reeled off stock reports to her grandfather and at the age of ten was acting as his confidential clerk, writing his letters and attending to some of his business. He was a man of many investments, and he told the child what was good and why. His poor health and bad eyesight, succeeded as they were by similar weaknesses on the part of her father, served to make her develop as quite a young girl into a practical business woman.

Easy to Arrange.

The poor but honest young man had bearded the millionaire in his den.

"Well," he said, "I want to marry your daughter."

"Impossible, sir, impossible!" exclaimed the old man. "Why, I would rather give up every pound I have than part with my only daughter."

"Oh, very well," calmly rejoined the diplomatic youth; "if that's the way you feel about it I won't be too heavy on you. Just write me out a check for a hundred thousand and we'll let it go at that."

Somewhat Suspicious.

"Why did you refuse me an interview, Mr. Gotrox? I only wanted to ask you how you earned your first thousand dollars."

"Excuse me, young man; I thought you wanted to know how I got that last million."

Milady's Mirror

The average woman has neither the time nor inclination to make an elaborate bedtime toilet, but there are essentials which no woman can afford to neglect not only for present use, but to checkmate Father Time and to make us physically attractive members of society.

A prime factor in encouraging and retaining health and good looks is body cleanliness.

The amount of soil accumulated in a single day when our work takes us into the big cities is remarkable, as evinced by a single experience.

It is sometimes a source of annoyance to perform little duties for ourselves when we are tired, and yet a woman is amply repaid by her fresh, well groomed appearance in the morning. Furthermore, it is a great saving of time if she must needs be off early the next day and cannot indulge in a leisurely morning toilet.

The daily bath is advised to all women who are physically strong enough to stand it. Not more than from five to ten minutes should be consumed in the bath. A quick sponge off in salt water or a shower in cold water makes a splendid tonic and bracer. One or two warm baths at night will keep one reasonably clean at least.

Where a warm bath is found too stimulating at night to prevent sleep it should then be taken in the morning or late afternoon, but in each case a cold sponge off should be taken to close the pores and prevent taking cold.

Where a body bath is not taken at night a warm foot bath will be found very grateful to tired and painful feet. It is very restful and draws the blood from the brain, inducing sleep.

Before starting the night toilet remove all binding clothing and slip on a long kimono and bedroom slippers, these without heels, as Turkish ones or sandals.

Relax as much as possible, especially when inclined to be nervous, for when the tension is taken off the nerves these little preliminaries tend to make one quite sleepy.

Several details of the toilet may be performed at the same time. For example, remove all pins from the hair and when false pieces are worn brush and comb these out and lay before an open window to thoroughly air. Shake out the hair thoroughly and spread it over the shoulders to ventilate and rest the roots.

When a foot bath is desired it is a good plan to take it at this point, so that two things may progress at the same time. When one is not hurried five minutes' relaxation may be indulged in. Be sure you sit in your most comfortable rocker while the night toilet is progressing.

Look to the Ways of Your Mouth.

If you haven't given your mouth much thought study it a bit. See if the expression of it has all the charm it might have. Try to catch yourself off guard some time in your mirror. You may be surprised to find your lips framed in cold, peevish or discontented lines. Keep them in good condition, red and glowing with health and not roughened and chapped with wind and cold.

See to it that your teeth are in as good condition as a dentist or dental surgery can put them. Don't pout, don't screw your mouth to one side when talking, don't purse up the lips, don't close them so tight that they positively look savage.

Cultivate a calm, pleasant, cheerful expression without a perpetual smile.

Add to your charm and power of pleasing in every legitimate way you can, for you are thus adding to your pleasures, your happiness and your success in life.

Beautiful Hands.

Mrs. Jamieson, the well known authoress, was a great admirer of beautiful hands and thus expressed herself on her favorite "point" in a woman.

"A white hand," she wrote, "is a very desirable ornament, and a hand can never be white unless it be kept clean, nor is this all, for if a young lady excels her companions in this respect she must keep her hands in constant motion, which will cause the blood to circulate freely and have a wonderful effect. The motion recommended is working at her needle, brightening her house and making herself as useful as possible in the performance of all domestic duties."

Hair Hint.

If a woman is troubled with a hideous growth of superfluous hair and if electrolysis is impossible for her the tweezers are safer than depilatories, for the reason that these powders remove the soft, downy growth as well as the long hair and the undeveloped hairs come back in the form of bristles. No woman should go about burdened with such an affliction. The cure is certain when the electric needle is used. Flat moles can be taken away by applying acetic acid. Protect the white skin about the blemish by anointing with vaseline or a good cream.

Admirable Description of This Sea In Whose Depths We Live.

We live at the bottom of a mighty sea, says a writer in giving a very entertaining and instructive article on the ocean of air about us. Sometimes from out its clear unsullied depths we behold afar the glittering stars swinging in their everlasting orbits. At other times the sea is dark and murky, and even at noonday we may not see aught of the King of Day save a dull, coppery ball. This ocean is wider and deeper and more easily moved than the aqueous oceans which separate continent from continent.

Sometimes it moves so gently to and fro that the dewdrop on the fragrant rose is undisturbed. At other times it moves with such tremendous violence that mighty oaks, rooted for centuries, are tossed about like pipestems. Sometimes it wafts the white sailed vessels across the sunlit seas to their haven under the hill. Again it bears down upon them with terrible fury and sends them to the harbor of missing ships beneath the seas.

It laps up the water from ocean and river and returns it in beneficent rain and dew. It gives to us the beautiful azure of noonday, and the chromatic glories of sunrise and sunset. It brings the day earlier than it otherwise would come, and holds the sunlight at evening in the twilight's delightful glow. It gives us the breath of life with its abundance of oxygen, and provides for the food that is to be our nourishment, as every morsel of breadstuff that enters into our beings must be part of the atmosphere.

Its constituents are so nicely and so delicately balanced that a very slight variation in their relative proportions would mean that no human being, constituted as we are at present, could exist at all. It gives us of its substance while we live and when we die it gradually takes back the materials it has loaned us, and we return to the dust whence we sprang. It gives us the glorious sky with its wondrous clouds and shining light and wards off the grim, eternal night that is everywhere a hundred miles above us.

It protects us from the fierce heat of the sun, which would otherwise burn us to a crisp. It wraps its fleecy mantle about us, and keeps away the icy cold of space, 460 degrees below zero. It meets afar the fierce darts of cosmic dust, those wanderers in the eternities of space, and burns them to ashes, before they can pierce us like needle darts moving with a velocity far greater than that of a rifle bullet.

It soothes us to sleep with its gentle, kindly touch, and brings cooling zephyrs to stay the fever that burns the invalid's cheek.

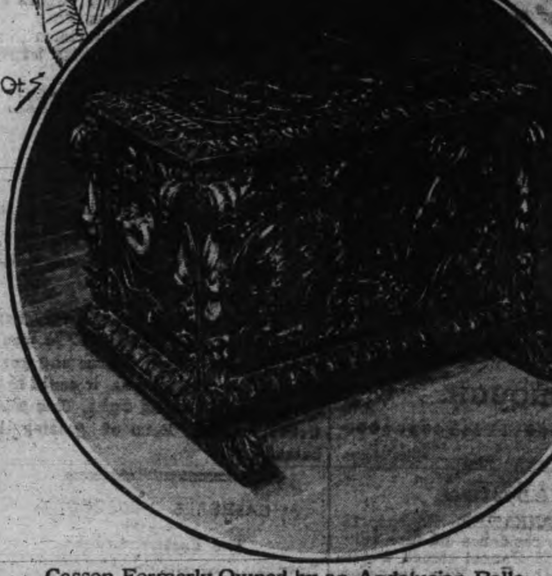
Early Renaissance With Heraldic Motif

AN Old Fashion Revived as a Modern Accomplishment

Old Spanish Chest from Seville, Nearly 200 Years Old

Hand Carved Chest Done Under Karl von Rydingsraard for a Recent Bride

End of Chest Hand Carved in Oak



Casson Formerly Owned by an Andalusian Belle

MYSTERIOUS quests are going forward just now among prospective brides, and attics, country houses, antique shops and out of the way corners are explored on the trail of the trousseau chest. Linen outfits, laces and lingerie apparel are of no greater importance to the bride than the quaint, carved box to store her treasures in, for one without the other this season loses half its charm.

It is only one more symptom of the revolt against modern fashions and the harking back to the customs of our grandmother's time, for in the banishment of the wedding chest, which was so popular in old Colonial days and is still so in many countries, there was lost out of the domestic life a very beautiful sentiment.

New York brides, it would seem, by common consent have determined to reinstate the old custom of including a trousseau chest in their outfit, and it is because of this resolve that all the unexpected places are being haunted in search of them.

Prices vary for a casson or trousseau chest according as the need appears to be great, for the antique dealer, that is the average dealer, is keen to scent a prospective purchaser. He sifts the chaff—the bargain hunter—from the wheat—the bride to be—and makes up his mind instantly as to the advisability of a high tariff, so it is wise for the girl who is on the hunt for a wedding chest in an antique shop to take with her some older and more seasoned shopper and leave the bargaining to her.

In such an event she may be able to buy a real antique box for $75. However, a knowledge of antiques is presupposed, for, with scores of reproductions that are regularly thrown on the market now, it takes a connoisseur sometimes to detect the difference. From the price already quoted the amount necessary to pay for a handsomely carved genuine antique chest will run up to near the $1,000 mark.

Nor is the latter sum an altogether visionary one, for a society girl of whose marriage the newspapers printed reams boasted of a rare chest which had been in the family of one of the Doges of Venice for several hundred years. It was bought on the other side by a friend of the bride and it is said on good authority that precisely $1,000 was paid for it. To be sure, it was a wonderfully rare thing, the carving exquisite and the lock, handles of sixteenth century hinges and hand wrought metal in intricate design. One part of the interior of the chest was divided off for old laces, and in the bottom of this compartment was a secret drawer for jewels, valuable papers and the like.

APPROACHING this in beauty of workmanship and cost is a rare old Spanish chest which one bride is contemplating buying. It is at present in the hands of an exclusive dealer in valuable antiques, and from it bridal chests of less complex design, but following the principal motif, already have been made. The cost of the original is $750; the reproductions $500 to $350. In the former case the mother of the bride furnished some of the old mahogany of which the chest was made, the wood having sentimental value. Originally it formed an old cradle in which the bride's mother, grandmother and great-grandmother were rocked. Being a useless piece of furniture to-day, it was made use of in this fashion.

This rich, old Spanish chest is vouched for as being at least 160 years old, and was bought in Seville from a family whose origin dates back to the time of the Spanish-Moorish reign. It is of oak, with some walnut worked in, and is unique in design for the reason that it rests on a standard with legs, all handsomely carved in Gothic style.

Another smaller chest, in a series of four, is also of Spanish origin, formerly belonging to some Andalusian and, though it is not raised from the floor as in the case of the one just described, it is very ornate and handsome in its way and would delight the heart of any bride. It will hold a goodly supply of linen and can be bought for $190.

For $150 there is a charming old Elizabethan bridal chest which has been selected to grace the new home of a June bride. It is carved in Gothic style, though the design is not so deeply sculptured as the others. For $55 a very attractive modern chest in birch can be bought. One recently seen had the four sides most appropriately carved in what is known as the linen fold design—a raised pattern in a series of convolutions such as might be obtained if the inner folds of a freshly laundered table cloth were pushed out at one end.

In fact, nearly all of the antique shops of the city are making a specialty of gathering together antique chests wherever they are to be found to supply the demand for trousseau chests. It has been, and is still, the custom to use these boxes for hall settles on which to throw rain coats, rubbers, tennis rackets and the like. But from such base uses they are now being rescued, especially in families where there are girls who are brides-to-be, or even in cases where Cupid hasn't yet scored a hit.

SOME girls there are who in preference to buying antiques the origin of which they are not at all sure are having their trousseau chests carved for them by a wood sculptor, and one artist of this description has ever so many orders now under way for bridal chests. For the most part they are of oak; are carved first, then made up at an expert cabinet maker's. Such a chest of fairly ornate design will cost in the neighborhood of $100, but it is worth it, for the work has a quality of virility and strength such as one sees in Rodin's sculptures.

Plenty of the girls, in fact, do their own carving and go to this man for instruction, and there is something in the sentiment of carving one's own casson or trousseau chest which appeals to the romantic side of a girl's nature.

To carve a chest is not difficult, and the wood sculptor who teaches society girls goes so far as to say that a beginner can do a chest quite as well as a seemingly simple article. One wants to aim at broad lights and sharp shadows and the depths should be rough and choppy to be effective, so that, taking a Norse design, for example, even though the work of the beginner be crude, it is bound to be effective. One society woman who is fond of carving has made no less than six of these chests as gifts for youthful brides this spring, and each one she has industriously carved herself in some rich mediaeval design. One was done in Elizabethan Renaissance in Gothic pattern, another copied from an old Italian coffer decorated in Roman ornamentation of scrolls and dragons, while the remaining number were modelled after those of ancient Norway and Sweden and revel in eccentric sea monsters, gnomes and dragons.

Most of the chests found in the shops to-day are of the seventeenth century period, for it was at that time that they became so popular. In fact, they were made in far greater numbers than any article of furniture, for not only were they used for the reception of old tapestries and fine garments but as a repository for valuables as well.

Many of the handsomest chests are patterned precisely on the lines of the mediaeval chests, and, like the ancient Italian coffers and cassons, have the interiors fitted with drawers and recesses for jewelry. Some of the oldest specimens were either carved or dug out of solid logs, but they are seldom seen in this country. Those made later were made in parts and assembled together after the carving was done, without the use of either nails or screws. The latter is one of the ways by which the novice can detect the truly antique from those newly made, but patterned after the old. The parts were dovetailed together, with perhaps the additional use of wooden pegs.

ONE scheme of the fake antique dealer is in trying to "pass" off a machine made chest for a hand carved one, and the effect obtained by a clever sculptor giving extra touches with his hand tools after the parts have been cut by machine is one somewhat difficult to detect. Nails and screws, not to mention glue, doubtless will also be found to be incorporated in the modern article supposed to be all hand made.

It is well to know all these points, because it guards one against frauds, and nowadays, where antique pieces are turned out by the carload, with all the earmarks of age, even to the worm holes, one cannot have too keen an eye. The old Saxon chests were usually made of cypress, and later oak took its place, but to-day both oak and mahogany are used almost exclusively, for these woods are not beautiful in grain and color, but lend themselves readily and effectively to hand carving.

Frequently a woman exhibits with great pride a chest on which an incised date is cut. Now, it isn't always well to place too much reliance on this alleged earmark of age, for it is quite possible for an unscrupulous dealer to carve any date he sees fit, so this is by no means an infallible sign, but when the raised figures are seen it is a pretty truthful indication of the age of the article.

As a rule the early Italian chests showed great wealth and richness as well as a great variety of carving. Many of them, too, were inlaid with marqueterie, and a Roman design common to the period of the Italian Renaissance was a series of graceful scrolls ending in rosettes, griffons, dragons and the like. Another feature of chests of this period which was most noticeable was a four leaved flower, which was often set at the interstices of the lines of Gothic tracery, and thumb carving which, to use a domestic symbol, resembled the thumbed edges of a freshly made pie was a comparatively cheap ornamentation in use before 1600, and it is not infrequently seen on cheap machine made articles to-day.

Taken altogether, one of the most popular styles of chests both in the eyes of the antique lover and for reproduction by the hand carver of to-day is that of the Elizabethan period, in which panelling ornamented with Gothic designs forms the decoration. It is not only effective—and some good specimens of real antiques can be found in this style—but in addition it is not as a rule frightfully expensive, a specimen in good condition costing about $75. When heraldic devices are sometimes added to the style—and this, by the way, offers a splendid opportunity for applying one's coat of arms or crest in illumination—the effect is very stunning.

In buying a chest for a bride's outfit one might just as well take the time to look for an old one as to purchase of the department stores, for while most of the large shops carry a small line of these chests they are for the most part of red cedar, either brass or copper bound, and intended for household linen alone. They run in price from $25 up.

Silk Kimonos for Summer Wear

A PLAIN silk or crêpe kimono can be made doubly attractive by fastening it at the throat and about the waist with wide flowered ribbon. About three-quarters of a yard at each side will make long enough ends for a pretty bow knot at the throat, while about three yards will be needed to encircle the waist and tie in front with short sash ends.

For a loose negligee a kimono style of wrapper is altogether the most comfortable and is still the favorite for bedroom use. Kimonos can now be bought in every material from inexpensive cotton crêpe to the most costly embroidered Japanese silks. For summer china silk kimonos are extremely pretty, and the washable silks also are good for this purpose. If one is fortunate in finding a remnant it is possible to make a silk kimono for a few dollars which will be useful for many months. It is all straight sewing and easily cut out with a paper pattern.

Cashmere is a nice weight also for all seasons, and often a wrapper of a material somewhat warmer than silk is necessary even in midsummer. Albatross also washes well, and in the light shades of pink and blue is extremely pretty. For travelling it is advisable to have a really warm wrapper of flannel or eiderdown, and especially on an ocean trip a really heavy wrapper is essential. Except in the really southern parts of Spain and Italy the evenings are seldom as hot in Europe as are experienced in the southern part of the United States, and the thin china silk negligees, unless lined with albatross or soft flannel, are by no means sufficient.

Extremely pretty bed jackets can be made from two silk scarfs joined down the centre of the back and the ends finished with a sewing silk fringe. Ends of ribbon tied in bow knots at each side form armholes, and the jacket is fastened in front by the same means.

Bed jackets and dressing jackets of embroidered handkerchief linen are the prettiest of all for summer use, and many girls are now making two or three of these little jackets for themselves instead of working upon lingerie shirt waists. Once embroidered there is nothing easier to make up with the aid of a paper pattern than a dressing jacket. The material itself costs very little, and even the lace edging can probably be bought for a small amount on a bargain table. It never pays, however, to economize too much on lace, for coarse lace not only wears out quickly, but it also spoils the effect of the daintiest hand embroidery.

Knitted kimono jackets of softest wool are extremely pretty this year and delightful to wear when there is a little chill in the air. One exceptionally attractive knitted jacket consisted of two separate parts of equal size, the outer part white and the inner jacket pink. So loosely knitted was the wool that the jacket was a decided pink, and while usually light in weight was delightfully warm at the same time. Now that sweaters are expected to fit so perfectly and be as long as a good sized ulster many girls have given up trying to knit them for themselves and are turning their attention to the smaller garments. The woollen bed jackets make nice summer work, as the stitch goes quickly and there is little fit or shaping to bother with.

JAPANESE NAPKINS.

YOUNG girls who are up to date in their ideas should not overlook the advisability of keeping on hand a supply of Japanese napkins, for their uses as labor savers are many, and also as preservators of the family health.

During the summer months young girls especially are great instigators of picnics. Then the pile of Japanese napkins should be quickly sought for cleanly and dainty bits of paper in which to wrap up sandwiches, cakes, pie and all the good things that help to make a picnic jolly. When they have performed their service they can be thrown away, not being sufficiently valuable to carry home and to burden the family wash tub.

Not only at picnics, but at veranda tea sprees after tennis and at informal luncheons at home should Japanese napkins be employed instead of fine linen. The modern young girl has begun to feel keenly that it is a necessity to adopt every possible means to save labor, and to this end she uses as freely as she can the little napkins from the land of the rising sun.

The most pronounced present use of these articles is in cases of illness, especially those that can be transmitted from one member of the family to another. Pneumonia, tonsilitis, tuberculosis and even the ordinary cold are now looked on as evils from which girls as well as all other sane mortals should protect themselves by every known device.

To use the handkerchiefs belonging to the regular wardrobe during the time of a severe cold and then to put them in with the wash on Monday is to expose the family, and particularly the laundress, to the same discomforting malady. In serious cases of illness, pneumonia among them, it is a truly lamentable fact that handkerchiefs, napkins and towels are often used for the relief of the invalid which afterward are cleaned in the laundry.

The use of the Japanese napkins, or handkerchiefs, as they may then be called, does away with this too frequent mode of spreading contagion. They serve the invalid as well as linen, and when they are no longer required they should be burned.

The very smooth sorts are chosen for use in sickness, while those of crinkled, crêpelike surfaces are preferred when attractiveness alone is desired. At most they cost about fifty cents a thousand.

PRACTICAL TALKS BY THE APRIL GRANDMOTHER

"TAKE a series of air baths," advised the April Grandmother after she had listened patiently to her second granddaughter's doleful tale of woe. "They are the best thing in the world for a morbid condition of mind. Why not begin at once by going for a long ride?" she suggested. "This morning the skies are a bit gray and the wind from the east, but the bracing air will prove a splendid mind tonic and—Showery!" she exclaimed in response to a demur from her languid young descendant. "Suppose you are overtaken by a shower? Surely a little rain water at this mild season of the year cannot possibly work harm to any healthy girl who is suitably dressed for riding! Anyhow the wind is likely to have shifted, the skies to have cleared and the sun to be shining brightly long before noon, by which time I trust you will begin to realize that there is still some joy to be extracted from the world, even if one is nearly sixteen winters old and convinced that life is a melodrama instead of the comedy which many persons of sixty summers consider it.

"If you really are afraid of showers—some girls shrink from rain as do cats from water," conceded the April Grandmother, "you can get a beneficial air bath by standing by an open window and letting the wind ruffle your hair, blow into your face and upon your throat and arms, meanwhile taking deep, long sustained draughts of pure oxygen into your lungs. Or you can walk up and down the veranda for ten minutes at a time at intervals during the day, being careful to keep going at a brisk pace, wearing high topped boots to keep the feet warm, but going without a hat, as the head is always the better for being kept cool and uncovered whenever the conventionalities permit.

"To be forced to endure the society of a person who cannot see things from our own viewpoint is worse than having no companionship whatever," admitted the April Grandmother, accurately translating the frown which disfigured her granddaughter's brow, "but there are many delightful walks which a girl may quite safely take alone, and no one will criticise her for playing solitaire golf. Following a ball over an eighteen hole course affords considerable exercise and, incidentally, blows a large quantity of oxygen into the lungs.

"Almost every summer cottage has an upper porch which may easily be transformed into an open air bedroo[illegible] such a sleeping place is no[illegible]ailable then the several windows of the ordinary chamber should be kept half raised throughout the night, so that the oxygen may be as pure as though one were sleeping in the open. It is a wonderful tonic for the complexion—one of those work-while-you-sleep recipes which appeal so strongly to the indolent.

"After all, you intend to ride this morning," repeated the April Grandmother, and quickly touched the bell summoning the butler. "That's right. Stay out until midday," adding half aloud as her granddaughter left the room, "for any amount of fresh air is needed to wash the cob[illegible] from the brain of [illegible] sensitive young girl."

TEACUPS THAT TELL FORTUNES.

IT often seems as if neither seers nor prophets were more eager to peer into the future than young girls. This is quite natural, since life lies before them and the inherent curiosity accredited to women piques them to wish to know what is going to happen as time advances.

The fortune telling teacup is quite new and presented as an aid to insight into the future. Undoubtedly it will be the cup most generally chosen to give away for engagement tokens, and also the one to be seen most frequently at veranda parties, where young girls meet to chat and to drink tea in the afternoon.

The outside of this knowing little cup is in no way remarkable. It may be decorated in almost any style. The saucer is also conventional and made to match the outside of the cup. But within the cup where the tea leaves cling and linger there is told another story. There distinctly imprinted on a white ground are various little emblems. One is a ring, which means a speedy engagement; another is a letter, implying that one is on its way. A package has the same significance. A bit of money is there to indicate great wealth, while a horseshoe denotes that luck rather than money will dominate the future. And alas! there is also the cat, companion of the spinster. A slipper foretells an adventure, and a small sword cries danger, beware! These signs, in fact, so cleverly line the teacup that the fortune teller's art is facilitated greatly.

After the tea is drunk the cup should be turned upside down to drain on the saucer. Then it should be whirled around three times to the left while the wish is held firmly in mind, and, at length, it should be presented to the girl who takes the responsibility of reading its contents. Under no circumstances should the one who drank its beverage attempt to pry into its mystery. At the occult moment, however, the cup speaks for itself. On whichever emblem the tea leaves rest the fortune teller sees the happenings of the future.

"Do the leaves speak the truth?" asks each young girl. Time only can answer.

COAT SWEATERS.

DELIGHTFULLY smart are the new coat sweaters, and so wonderfully are they woven that they add no more to the width of the waist line or hips than a perfectly fitting tailor jacket. Fastening in front or a little to one side with good sized loops and buttons large enough to manipulate comfortably, unlike the old horror of the sweater or jersey which had to be pulled on over the head, the sweater of the present is easy to put on, and when it is on looks as neat and trim as possible.

The new sweaters are to be had in a wide variety of models, from the inexpensive machine made hip length reefer coat which reaches below the knees, fits in slightly at the waist line, and while really warm is of so fine wool and so close stitch that it is not at all heavy in weight.

The smartest sweaters are all of course hand knitted, and in the stitch there is as great a difference as in the machine weaving. Nor are these sweaters at all difficult to make if one is at all adept at knitting. For a small payment a book of full directions will be sent from any embroidery store where the necessary wool is purchased, so that with little difficulty a girl can make her own sweater to measurement. As it is so much longer than her old sweater, this one will take longer to make, but it is all straight knitting, with little if any fitting. Collar and cuffs of a pretty shade of blue or a delicate coral pink will be sure to be most becoming and will give a certain little distinctiveness to the coat.

Dark sweaters with white collar and cuffs are more useful perhaps than the white, but never so attractive nor so popular.

A long coat sweater takes the place of any other outdoor wrap or ulster, and by many is preferred to the heavier white blanket coats. Certainly a long knitted jacket looks extremely well with a white duck tennis suit.

CAUGHT AT THE PLATE

Tommy Longboat, whose sun it has been said, has set to rise no more, won a 15 mile race at Buffalo the other day, from Nebrick, and at no time did the Buffalo runner have a chance. Long- finished the distance in 1.26.08 3-5, and that is pretty decent time.

That game on Saturday between the All Stars and T.A.S brought out a few things and one of these was that the city league champions are not invincible. The players are just as willing to lose their heads with the opposing team batting their twirler as are the other three teams. They can make wild heaves and perform just as groggy as any of the city league ball tossers.

Then too, on the showing, there does not appear to be any great difference between the twirling ability of Ab. Quinlan and Norm Dusty. Of course there are several ways of looking at this. While both men have been pitching against practically the same batters for two seasons, Quinlan had to throw to a well selected team, and one that could and did bat.

Each of the two box artists was touched up for nine hits. Dusty kept his scattered. He had the regular T.A.S. lineup to face, save O'Hearn. Some fans would perhaps be inclined to believe that Quinlan had the harder row to hoe, and while this will be granted by others yet, this twirler's much longer experience, should let him get away easily with the handicap.

PUPILS' GIFT TO TEACHER

Special to the Review.

Omemee, June 20.—On Monday afternoon a goodly number of the parents and friends gathered at the Orange Corners school and presented the teacher, Miss J. McConnell, who is leaving at the close of this term, with a handsome gold ring set with amethysts. The address was read by Master Stanley Magee, while Master Bernard Curtain made the presentation.

The address was as follows:—

Miss Jennie McConnell:

Dear Teacher,—It is with feelings of sorrow that we anticipate your departure from our midst, and cannot let the occasion pass without in some way expressing our regret. During the time that you have been our teacher you have by your untiring efforts been engaged successfully, we hope, in instructing us in knowledge and moulding our lives and character. For the accomplishment of these objects you have spared no pains, but the full extent and value of your work we [illegible] nor will we ever be [illegible] to measure it. However, those of us who have come under your influence and desire to profit by your instruction will never forget your zeal and devotion to duty. Will you, therefore, accept this slight token of our appreciation of your services, and may it in after years remind you of your ever grateful friends and pupils.

We also extend to you our best wishes for your future success and happiness.

Signed on behalf of the school and section.

BERNARD CURTAIN,
STANLEY MAGEE.

Miss McConnell, though completely taken by surprise, made a suitable reply, thanking her pupils and friends for the very pretty gift, which would serve as a lasting remembrance of the many pleasant days spent with the pupils and friends at Orange Corners.

A dainty lunch was then served by the ladies, and altogether a very pleasant afternoon was spent.

MORE MONEY FOR THE MEN; THE NEW WAGE SCHEDULE

Conciliation Board Decides in Favor of Train Workers—Arbitration Between the C.P.R. and G.T.R. and Their Traffic Employees—A Substantial Increase is Granted.

Toronto, June 22.—The conciliation board appointed to adjust the rules, as between the Canadian Pacific and Grand Trunk Railways and their traffic employes, have reported a finding which is, however, accompanied by two minority reports. The increases are substantial, even if not as high as were demanded.

J. G. O'Donoghue, representing the employes, in his supplementary report, practically reiterates the original demands of the C.P.R. employes, while Hon. Wallace Nesbitt, K.C., who represented the railways, recommends, for the Grand Trunk, a 15 per cent. increase in wages, and no change in the rules.

The new wages schedule, except for yard service, is now on a hundred-mile basis, while the difference in rates east and west of Carleton Junction, have been replaced by a flat rate, as requested by the employes. At present the Grand Trunk pay so much a month without regard to mileage, except for through freight, which has been on a mileage basis. As showing the change in the rate, whereas at present G.T.R. conductors on through freight now get $2.90 per 100 miles and brakemen $1.90, they will get $3.35 and $2.20 respectively. They had asked for $397 1-2 and $2.70 respectively.

The following report was made by the board in recommending the changes in the rates of the G.T.R., Wallace Nesbitt dissenting:

"The majority of the board are of the opinion that the men are justified in asking that roads in the some territory should standardized their rates of pay and their rules also so far as they may deal with like general conditions of service.

"To enable the standardization of rates of pay on the Grand Trunk Railway to be carried out, the majority of the board recommend that the company should extend its adoption of the mileage basis of pay to cover not only its through freight service as in the past, but also (1) its passenger service (except for such a list of specified runs as may be agreed upon between the company and its employes); (2) its way freight service, and (3) its mixed and all other train services. Also, that whatever rates of pay may be adopted should be applied to all divisions of the railway in the eastern territory.

"The majority of the board believe that the rates of pay upon the Grand Trunk should be brought up to the standard paid on roads in the same territory. But inasmuch as to do this at once would place upon the company a heavy increase of it wage list, the majority of the board recommend that standardization should be reached by two increases.

It is the opinion of the majority of the board that the first increase should be made to take effect May 1, 1910, regarding the date of the second increase, the chairman and Mr. O'Donoghue do not agree. Mr. O'Donoghue's opinion is that the men and the company should meet together to arrange a date when the completion of the standardization of rates should take effect. The chairman, however, would give to the company a longer time in which to complete the standardization than Mr. O'Donoghue thinks would be either fair to the men or necessary for the company.

MERGER IN NATURAL GAS

Chatham, June 22.—A merger of the four largest natural gas companies now operating in southwestern Ontario, with the object of securing control of the entire field is now in progress, and will likely be concluded within a few days. English syndicates are behind the merger, which will be capitalized at $5,000,000. It involves the Volcanic Oil Gas Co. of Chatham; the United Fuel Supply Co. of Sarnia; the Northern Pipe Line Co. and the Leamington Oil and Gas Co. These concerns at present are supplying practically all the cities and towns in this section with natural gas.

The Volcanic Oil and Gas Co., in which Coste Bros. of Niagara Falls, are the moving spirits, is holding out, but an agreement is expected at any time. The merger will mean no change in the present gas prices, which are fixed by franchise.

A DIG FOR ROOSEVELT

London, June 22.—Sidney Buxton, president of the Board of Trade, opened the International Congress of Commerce yesterday.

Referring to the differences in national fiscal systems, Mr. Buxton concluded his comment on this subject with the remark: "But not being an ex-President of the United States, I am not going to tell you how to run your shows."

Harry Furniss Still Lives.

London, June 22.—Harry Furniss, the celebrated artist of Punch, says he isn't dead, in spite of the report cabled to various parts of the Empire. It was Harold Furniss, a young artist, who died.

THE WORLD MISSIONARY CONFERENCE

Edinburgh, June 22.—Again yesterday audiences that taxed the capaci- [illegible] World Missionary Conference Board, applauded and discussed the views of those who are giving much of their time or have devoted their lives to missionary work among non-Christian peoples.

Owing to a change in the program the report of the commission on "cooperation and the promotion of unity," which was to have been made on Thursday, was presented yesterday. It was read by the chairman of the commission, Sir Andrew H. L. Fraser, formerly Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal.

TERRIBLE STORM IN THE WEST

Gladstone, Man., June 22.—A terrible wind struck Gladstone Monday night leaving a trail of wreckage and debris. There was no loss of life, but the damage done will amount to thousands of dollars. Gladstone's commodious skating rink lies a complete wreck. The large smoke stack of the Echo Milling Co. was blown down and crushed in an adjoining building. The grand stand of the exhibition grounds is in ruins. Many buildings were unroofed and light structures blown down.

NAVY TENDERS TO BE SECRET

Ottawa, June 22.—Owing to the fact that the plans of British warships on which the vessels of the Canadian navy will be based, must be kept secret, tenders for the Canadian ships will not be called for in the ordinary way. It would not do, for instance, for the plans to get into the hands of the United States contractors. The designs will, therefore, be submitted to such British and Canadian firms as desire to compete. It is probable that the War Office will be induced to send copies of its original plans to Canada so that they can be examined by Canadian firms which desire to tender.

KNIGHTHOOD FOR MAYORS?

Ottawa, June 22.—It is expected that a batch of birthday honors will be announced in London on Friday next, and it is stated here that both Mayor Geory of Toronto and Mayor Guerin of Montreal will be knighted in recognition of their trips to King Edward's funeral.

Other names mentioned as likely to receive honors are: Hon. L. P. Brodeur, Hon. THE FISHERIES ARBITRATION CASE

London, June 22.—At The Hague fisheries arbitration ex-Senator George Turner opened the case for the United States.

If in the treaty the expression "bays" had to be interpreted in a geographical or in a legal sense, Senator Turner pointed out that at the time of the negotiations which preceded the treaty of 1783 the United States was stronger than Great Britain and in consequence [illegible] view of the negotiations on behalf of America was a deciding factor in the interpretation of the treaty.

The United States had received these fisheries as a right, the ultimatum being accepted as a condition of peace.

SHIP OF THE "HOLY GHOSTS" AT HALIFAX

Halifax, June 22.—The barkentine Kingdom, the vessel belonging to the Holy Ghost Colony, arrived yesterday from Portland. She anchored at quarantine. A party of "Holy Ghosts" is on board. The barkentine has never before been in Canadian waters.

While at Boston a week ago, one of those on board was before the court to secure the release from the ship of a girl named Sarah Joseph, whom it was charged was forcibly detained on board. As the girl did not want to leave she was sent back to the ship and is among those on board.

The vessel is said to be waiting orders and no one is allowed on board.

ANOTHER TRUNK MURDER

Portland, Ore., June 22.—The blunder of the murderers in wrongly routing a trunk sent to the Union Depot in this city was the means late Monday of disclosing a ghastly murder. The victim is William A. Johnson, who, with his wife and seven-year-old son, arrived here Monday morning in company with a man who went by the name of A. C. Powers. The party registered at a cheap north end hotel, "Powers" as coming from Nome, Alaska. The Johnsons did not give their residence.

A baggageman noticed a pool of blood which had trickled from the trunk, broke it open and discovered the body of a man.

Powers, whose real name is J. F. Webb, and Mrs. Johnson were arrested at an uptown lodging-house early yesterday.

On Webb's person were found two watches, one of which Mrs. Johnson identified as her husband's, and two women's handkerchiefs, both bloodstained. One of Webb's hands was injured and bandaged. He carried an International Typographical Union card, issued by Vancouver (B.C.) Local No. 2226.

HOT WAVE HITS NEW YORK HARD

New York, June 22.—The metropolis suffered intensely from heat yesterday. The temperature at noon was 84 degrees and the mercury was still mounting the tube, while the humidity was 60, which made conditions oppressive.

Several prostrations are reported and there was a general exodus to the beaches to escape the torrid weather. Experts on hot weather beverages say New York spends $1,500,000 a day to quench its thirst on sultry days like these. Chicago has confessed that it spent half a million daily to keep cool.

COMMITTED FOR DYNAMITING

Brockville, June 22.—Grant and Herbert Easter and Kay Prue, the three young farmers charged with dynamiting the residence of Nathan Euchre near Algonquin one month ago, were given a hearing in the Police Court yesterday. Six witnesses were examined. There was no direct testimony against the accused, but it was shown that Kay Prue some weeks before the outrage purchased a stick of dynamite from a neighboring farmer, to blast out a rock on the Henry Easter farm. The magistrate committed the trio for trial without bail.

MYSTERIOUS HOTEL TRAGEDY

New York, June 22.—Mrs. Mary E. Hawes of Bridgeport, Conn., was found shot to death in her room at the Grand Union Hotel yesterday. A magazine revolver with which Mrs. Hawes was believed to have thrice shot herself, was found beside the body, but there was no trace of $5,000 in jewelry and valuables she was reported to have had.

Zieman of Preston is in the chair, and 100 members are in attendance. Addresses of welcome were delivered by Mayor Couper, W. F. Nickle, M.P.P., E. T. Steacy, president of the local association; Geo. Mills and C. A. MacPherson.

HE'S A HERO TWICE OVER

Beadle Martin of Toronto University Saves Two Lives.

Toronto, June 22.—When Robt. Martin, 758 Crawford street, beadle at the Toronto University, pulled James O'Donoghue, watchman for the Construction & Paving Co., out of a 16-foot water hole at the company's sandpits at Crawford and Bloor streets, yesterday afternoon, he found that he was twice a hero, for, clinging to the rescued man's legs was eight-year-old Charles Hughes, son of John Hughes of the fire department, who lives at 135 Manning avenue.

The watchman had gone to the rescue of the boy, who had upset from a raft with which he and a number of other lads had been playing. The watchman, who is not a young man by any means, in his efforts to save the boy, had himself fallen in and only his hat and one arm, which grasped the raft, were visible when Mr. Martin came to the rescue.

The watchman, who lives nearby on Crawford street, was on the high bank surrounding the pit when he saw them. A woman says that he ran down the bank calling to the boys, and that in jumping from the raft it was shoved out into the deep water with little Charlie still on it. When he saw the watchman coming he jumped, evidently believing the water to be shallow.

When O'Donoghue reached the pond he promptly shoved out the raft to the spot where he had seen the youngster struggling, but it struck the boy, who sank again, while O'Donoghue also went in. Mr. Martin, who lives on the brow of the embankment, had heard the calls of the watchman, and rushed down the bank and into the water, believing that he was the only one in danger. All he could see was the man's arm on the raft and a hat on the water. He got O'Donoghue to the bank, and as he drew him from the water, saw the little fellow clinging to the watchman's legs.

AN EPOCH IN HISTORY

Special to The Review.

Dusseldorf, June 22.—The first voyage ever taken by an aerial liner in the passenger service was successful day. Count Zepplin's airship, the Deutschland, landed here after a flight of 280 miles from Friederichshafen, which was accomplished in ten hours.

This was the conclusion of the first part of the 700 mile journey, which the airship has begun. The count was jubilant over his success, and his twenty passengers declared that they had enjoyed the whole journey. Weather conditions were ideal.

REASONS GIVEN THE CABINET COUNCIL

By F. D. Kerr in Memorandum on Behalf of Henderson—Council Did Not Interfere With Justice Riddell's Sentence of Death on the Prisoner—Youngest Person to be Executed in Canada

In an energetic and commendable defence of Robert Henderson, the penniless youth who is to be hanged to-morrow morning, his counsel, Mr. F. D. Kerr, exhausted the last possible avenue of hope yesterday, when he placed the case before the Dominion Cabinet Council, which body could not see its way clear to interfere with the carrying out of the death sentence imposed by Mr. Justice Riddell.

Yesterday morning at Ottawa Mr. Kerr saw Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Mr. Charles Murphy, Deputy Minister of Justice, and head of the Department in the absence of Hon. A. B. Aylesworth, and other members of the Cabinet.

As a result a meeting of the Cabinet in Council was called, and Mr. Kerr submitted, by request, a special memorandum for the council's considera- [illegible] which was given the reasons why, in his [illegible], the sentence passed on Henderson should be commuted.

The first reason given in the memorandum is "the prisoner is only 17 years of age, and his execution would be that of the youngest person in Canada, ac- [illegible] Some of the other reasons given in the memorandum are:—

The affidavit evidence of mother at trial shows insanity on both sides of his parents to an excessive degree. (Copy produced.)

The doctors for the Crown called by defence swore to moral imbecility "implanted by Providence" for which he is not responsible (evidence p. 121) that "moral imbecility" and "physical" are twin brothers; that he had some surface physical disabilities also, such as cleft palate, etc., (evidence p. 94.)

Judge held out (pp 152 and 152) at length and strongly to jury the suggestions that while strict letter of law meant "guilty" that there was a tribunal to administer mercy and followed it up by sending for jury at 6 o'clock after being out only one hour and of his own motion stating very suggestively, "In case of your verdict being 'guilty' you are at perfect liberty to couple with that motion a recommendation to mercy which will be sent to proper quarters." This suggestion [illegible] an immediate effect (five minutes) and jury influenced by the suggestion felt that the higher tribunal of mercy would grant a commutation.

The jury bound by the necessities of the law as to proof in insanity cases "beyond a reasonable doubt," but impressed by the "doubt" in all their minds have left it to the executive with "a very strong recommendation to mercy" expecting a commutation. (See affidavits of jurymen and letters requesting commutation.)

THREE MORE BODIES FOUND

Montreal, June 22.—Three more bodies were recovered from the ruins of The Herald building yesterday afternoon, making the total called for by the list of the missing. Those taken out yesterday were identified as those of Reuben Morrison, John Wade and Gustave Lippe. Morrison, who had entered the office looking for employment in the stereotyping department on the fourth floor, was found sitting in a chair, with his umbrella still clasped in his hand.

One body remains unidentified. It should be that of John Cunningham, but his relatives say that it is not. There may be still another body in the ruins.

The G.T.P. will build a big hotel in Winnipeg, says Charles M. Hays.

Mrs. Martin Manson was drowned in the Assiniboine at Treherne by her horse backing her off the ferry.

CANADA'S NAVY STRIKES A SNAG

Montreal, June 22.—Canada's navy has hit her first snag. The Government had planned to construct a large drydock and shipbuilding plant here. Albert Vickers, of Vickers, Sons & Maxim, who were the successful tenderers, and Mr. F. Orr Lewis, his Canadian representative, are on their way to Ottawa to tell the Government that their plan is completely out of the question, and that they will have to modify and change the presents proposition to such an extent that it practically means that a new scheme will have to be worked out.

SIR MACKENZIE BOWELL GIVES DOHERTY A BOOST

Former Premier Says New "New Lieutenant" is a Man of the Highest Ideals and Party Gains by the Selection—5,000 Person at Trenton Picnic.

Trenton, June 22.—The climax of Mr. Borden's Ontario tour was reached here yesterday when 5,000 people attended the combined picnic of the Counties of Hastings, Prince Edward and Westmoreland Conservative Associations.

An unexpected feature was introduced by the applause given the studied remarks of Sir Mackenzie Bowell, who evidently has not forgotten the "nest of traitors," for in congratulating Mr. Borden in his choice of a new first lieutenant, the ex-Premier said of Hon. C. J. Doherty, M.P., of Montreal, and who has been spoken of as Mr. Borden's new "first lieutenant."

"He is in every sense worthy of the position. He is an honest man, whose public and private actions are prompted by the highest ideals. He is of the same class of man as Sir John Thompson. He will be loyal to his leader and loyal to his principles. He abhors trickery and duplicity. The Conservative party gains by his selection.

"I have served the Conservative party under five leaders," declared Sir Mackenzie, "and I want to live long enough to see the present Government hurled from power and to see my friend here placed in charge of the affairs of the country as Prime Minister. When that is accomplished I am ready to go in peace."

Following upon these significant words, J. W. Johnson, M.P.P. for West Hastings, said:

"When Mr. Borden is called upon to form a Cabinet we require from him that it should contain no man whose record is tainted, no matter how eminent his services to the party may have been in the past. The Conservative party cannot accord to anyone who has used time or money to his own advantage that he owed to the business in which he was employed or from the management of a company, to promote his own interests. The Conservative party carried that burden too long."

The town was elaborately decorated. Streamers, bunting and burgees were displayed everywhere. The temporary platform in the park was a mass of color and fife and brass bands played.

Acting Mayor Saylor presided in the absence of Dr. Kidd, the president of the local convention, and E. Gus Porter, M.P., introduced Mr. Borden, who was given a rousing reception. In deprecating the absence of Hon. Mr. Whitney, who has left for Europe, Mr. Borden referred to another tour in the autumn, when he and Mr. Whitney would again speak extensively through Ontario.

"This day is significant," said Mr. Borden. "It is the anniversary of the great Liberal convention in Ottawa in 1893. There were 12 planks in the platform adopted at that convention. Where are they? What has become of these planks since 1896? They have been put carefully away in cold storage. They have been locked up and one key has been put in the possession of Sir Wilfrid Laurier and the other has been put in the possession of Sir Richard Cartwright, and neither one can be persuaded to produce them for the purpose of bringing the platform forward."

After a brief review of topics touched on at length at his previous meetings, Mr. Borden dealt with immigration problems, quoting liberally from "a valuable brochure issued by C. A. Magrath, M.P., on "Canada's Growth and Some Problems Affecting it."

AN OUTING

Yesterday, far from the "madding crowd's ignoble strife," as Gray once wrote, the doctors and lawyers and a few invited acquaintances, among them the elect of the city, went down the Otonabee on an outing. For a few hours they forgot there was such a thing as briefs and latest decisions and sickness and relapses, and enjoyed themselves. The trouble with many is that there is not enough relaxation. The business man sticks too closely to business, the woman too closely to the house. They wonder why it is that the headache comes, why they are so irritable, can't sleep and don't enjoy their meals. Take a day off once in a while and leave it all behind. That's the way the doctors and lawyers did and they enjoyed themselves. Go out into the country and listen to the birds sing.

THE SUFFRAGETTE

The suffragettes are making another bid for notoriety, now that Theodore Roosevelt has passed out of the sight of British eyes. The suffragettes were badly advised. They did not use good tactics. Women may influence when they act as women, but as soon as they abandon that role and try to drop skirts for trousers, they fail. The day will probably come when the women over the sea will win their point. Women usually win. But pandemonium performances, assinine actions, will not gain much real favor worth while, and the pouplace will demand an increase in crazy actions to keep up interest. Let the suffragette instruct her family correctly, and in a generation the whole affair is settled. The woman's sphere is at home first, and ruling the nation afterward, and if she individually rules the nation well, the members of the nation collectively will not be at all hard to deal with.

PROPRIETOR PURSER

M. W. G. Purser last Friday made his bow to the Port Hope public as the new proprietor of the Port Hope Times—the self-announced exponent of Conservatism, fair play and honesty. By this time Mr. Purser will no doubt have a fyle full of suggestions how to improve his paper. If he publishes certain articles he will be called too fresh. If he leaves them out, some one will whisper to him that there is danger of his making the paper stale. If he criticizes any one keenly, the victim [illegible] a writ. Should he hand out the salve and praise, the pleased personage comes in and buys a dozen papers, or sends a friend. Sometimes the pleased person pays for these papers, and sometimes he doesn't.

Mr. Purser has our sympathy as well as our congratulations.

WHO IS WHO

It isn't the Irishman who leads the list in Canada's penitentiary population. Only 54 Irishmen are there. The Scotch, ever wise with their baubees, are still lower on the list and according to the recent report from the penitentaries there are only 34 Scotchmen there. The Englishman boost the figures a bit. There are 199 of the native-born sons of Old England behind the penitentiary bars in Canada. But that is not many for the host of Englishmen here.

Then where are our prisons recruited from? Oh! the foreigners, of course, the stabbing, jabbing, shooting foreigners. Wrong sir, the much abused foreigners do not seem to figure very heavily in police and detective annals except for being drunk and disorderly. It is the Canadian himself. There are 1046 Canadians in the penitentary at present and it goes without saying that there are men in penitentiary who should be outside, and men outside who should be in. Our friend to the south, Uncle Sam, is responsible for 188 crooks who are doing time behind stone walls. The other principal nations are:—Italy, 71; Russian, 31; Germeny, 27; Austria, 23; France, 19; Denmark, 15; China, 16; Other countries, 49.

So remember that 77 per cent. of our penitentiary population is made up of Canadian and British born, and 10 per cent. from the United States. Don't abuse the foreigner too much. Only 13 per cent. of the population in Canada's pens are foreigners.

We can't well throw stones at foreigners.

SPIRITUALISM

The Kingston Whig is discussing Madame Poladino. The Madame has been doing wonderful stunts abroad. She is a professed spiritualist, and of course the lights were out when the tables tipped, the bells jingled and the guitar sounded. But a man hid beneath the table and found that the medium was elevating it by her knee, her foot played the guitar. He caught her by the ankle and the spirit screamed.

Madame Paladino is an advertized medium of world-wide fame, and spiritualists all over the country are much in earnest in denying that the man beneath the table is telling the truth. Perhaps he had hold of the wrong leg.

There is no doubt but there is a great deal of fake about much that is called spiritualism, and there is also no doubt, but that some psychic pheomona are true.

Flammarion, the eminent French astronomer, philosopher and student of the unknown world, has written a book called "The Unknown." It is bristling, not with seances and mediums, but strange facts unexplainable by man. A woman in Paris, France, fell to the ground in a faint. In a vision she saw her brother shot in Africa. He was shot at the hour and day of the vision. Hundreds of such incidents as these, with names attached, and some from very high dignitaries of church and state, will at least lead the scoffer to think there may be something in spiritualism, and in the force of departing and personality of departed spirits.

HER TRIUMPH

Miss Julia Choate was at the Conservatory of Music last night presented with two medals for excellence of violin work. The young lady is to be congratulated. In her glad hour of Tuesday evening all the disappointments of the early stage were forgotten. The tiresome hours in gaining a knowledge how first to hold the violin, then how to use the bow and all the rest of the exacting routine the following of which is so necessary to perfected elegance and artistic work.

Many are the young men and women who have taken up music and thrown it aside, taken up French to forget it, took fitful starts at shorthand and dropped it. And then they wonder why it is that they never succeed.

Miss Choate has won a triumph and her determination and artistic temperament should win other laurels for her if she perseveres to the end.

Chesterfield Superficiality.

Chesterfield's idea of excellence was essentially superficial, for his praise of solid acquirement and genuine principle is always coupled with the assertion of their entire inutility if unaccompanied by grace, external polish and an agreeable manifestation. He omits all consideration of their intrinsic worth and absolute dignity. Their value to the individual, according to him, is wholly proportioned to his skill in using them in a social form.

In one of his earlier letters to Philip Stanhope he writes: "What an advantage has a graceful speaker with genteel motions, a handsome figure, over one who shall speak full as much good sense, but who is destitute of these ornaments! In business how prevalent are the graces, how detrimental is the want of them! If you should not acquire manners, all the rest will be of little use to you. By manners I mean engaging, insinuating, shining manners, a distinguished politeness, an almost irresistible address, a superior gracefulness in all you say and do." He would have manners overlay individuality and goes so far as to declare that a soldier is a brute, a scholar a pedant and a philosopher a cynic without good breeding.—London Standard.

By GASTON LEROUX

COPYRIGHT, 1908, By BRENTANO'S.

I looked at the keeper when he put the last question, and I am much mistaken if I did not detect an evil smile on his lips. At that moment the noise of loud quarreling reached us. We even thought we heard a dull sound of blows, as if some one was being beaten. The Green Man quickly rose and hurried to the door by the side of the fireplace, but it was opened by the landlord, who appeared and said to the keeper:

"Don't alarm yourself, monsieur. It is my wife. She has the toothache." And he laughed. "Here, Mother Angenoux; here are some scraps for your cat."

He held out a packet to the old woman, who took it eagerly and went out of the door, closely followed by her cat.

"Then you won't serve me?" asked the Green Man.

Daddy Mathieu's face was placid and no longer retained its expression of hatred.

"I've nothing for you—nothing for you. Take yourself off."

The Green Man quietly refilled his pipe, lit it, bowed to us and went out. No sooner was he over the threshold than Daddy Mathieu slammed the door after him, and, turning toward us, with eyes bloodshot and frothing at the mouth, he hissed to us, shaking his clinched fist at the door he had just shut on the man he evidently hated:

"I don't know who you are who tell me 'We shall have to eat red meat now,' but if it will interest you to know it—that man is the murderer!"

With which words Daddy Mathieu immediately left us. Rouletabille returned toward the fireplace and said:

"Now we'll grill our steak. How do you like the cider? It's a little tart, but I like it."

We saw no more of Daddy Mathieu that day, and absolute silence reigned in the inn when we left it after placing 5 francs on the table in payment for our feast.

Rouletabille at once set off on a three mile walk around Professor Stangerson's estate. He halted for some ten minutes at the corner of a narrow road black with soot near to some charcoal burners' huts in the forest of St. Genevieve, which touches on the road from Epinay to Corbeil, to tell me that the murderer had certainly passed that way before entering the grounds and concealing himself in the little clump of trees.

"You don't think, then, that the keeper knows anything of it?" I asked.

"We shall see that later," he replied. "For the present I'm not interested in what the landlord said about the man. The landlord hates him. I didn't take you to breakfast at the Donjon inn for the sake of the Green Man."

Then Rouletabille, with great precaution, glided, followed by me, toward the little building which, standing near the park gate, served for the home of the concierges who had been arrested that morning. With the skill of an acrobat he got into the lodge by an upper window which had been left open and returned ten minutes later. He said only "Ah!" a word which in his mouth signified many things.

We were about to take the road leading to the chateau when a considerable stir at the park gate attracted our attention. A carriage had arrived, and some people had come from the chateau to meet it. Rouletabille pointed out to me a gentleman who descended from it.

"That's the chief of the Paris police," he said. "Now we shall see what Frederic Larsan has up his sleeve and whether he is so much cleverer than anybody else."

The carriage of the chief was followed by three other vehicles containing reporters, who were also desirous of entering the park. But two gendarmes stationed at the gate had evidently received orders to refuse admission to anybody. The chief of police calmed their impatience by undertaking to furnish to the press that evening all the information he could give that would not interfere with the judicial inquiry.

CHAPTER XI.

In Which Frederic Larsan Explains How the Murderer Was Able to Get Out of the Yellow Room.

AMONG the mass of papers, legal documents, memoirs and extracts from newspapers which I have collected relating to the mystery of the yellow room there is one very interesting piece. It is a detail of the famous examination which took place that afternoon in the laboratory of Professor Stangerson before the chief of police. This narrative is from the pen of M. Maleine, the registrar, who, like the examining magistrate, had spent some of his leisure time in the pursuit of literature.

THE REGISTRAR'S NARRATIVE.

The examining magistrate and I, says M. Maleine, found ourselves in the yellow room in the company of the builder who had constructed the pavilion after Professor Stangerson's designs. He had a workman with him. M. de Marquet had had the walls laid entirely bare—that is to say, he had had them stripped of the paper which had decorated them. Blows with a pick here and there satisfied us of the nonexistence of any sort of opening. The floor and the ceiling were thoroughly sounded. We found nothing. There was nothing to be found. M. de Marquet appeared to be delighted and never ceased repeating:

"What a case! What a case! We shall never know, you'll see, how the murderer was able to get out of this room!"

Then suddenly, with a radiant face, he called to the officer in charge of the gendarmes.

"Go to the chateau," he said, "and request M. Stangerson and M. Robert Darzac to come to me in the laboratory, also Daddy Jacques, and let your men bring here the two concierges."

Five minutes later all were assembled in the laboratory. The chief of police, who had arrived at the Glandier, joined us at that moment. I was seated at M. Stangerson's desk ready for work when M. de Marquet made us the following little speech, as original as it was unexpected:

"With your permission, gentlemen, as examinations lead to nothing, we will for once abandon the old system of interrogation. I will not have you brought before me one by one, but we will all remain here as we are—M. Stangerson, M. Robert Darzac, Daddy Jacques and the two concierges, the chief of police, the registrar and myself. We shall all be on the same footing. The concierges may for the moment forget that they have been arrested. We are going to confer together. We are on the spot where the crime was committed. We have nothing else to discuss but the crime. So let us discuss it freely, intelligently or otherwise, so long as we speak just what is in our minds. There need be no formality or method, since this won't help us in any way."

Then, passing before me, he said in a low voice:

"What do you think of that, eh? What a scene! Could you have thought of that? I'll make a little piece out of it for the vaudeville." And he rubbed his hands with glee.

I turned my eyes on M. Stangerson. The hope he had received from the doctor's latest reports, who had stated that Mlle. Stangerson might recover from her wounds, had not been able to efface from his noble features the marks of the great sorrow that was upon him. He had believed his daughter to be dead, and he was still broken by that belief. His clear, soft blue eyes expressed infinite sorrow.

"Now, M. Stangerson," said M. de Marquet, with somewhat of an important air, "place yourself exactly where you were when Mlle. Stangerson left you to go to her chamber."

M. Stangerson rose and, standing at a certain distance from the door of the yellow room, said in an even voice and without the least trace of emphasis, a voice which I can only describe as a dead voice:

"I was here. About 11 o'clock, after I had made a brief chemical experiment at the furnaces of the laboratory, needing all the space behind me, I had my desk moved here by Daddy Jacques, who spent the evening in cleaning some of my apparatus. My daughter had been working at the same desk with me. When it was her time to leave she rose, kissed me and bade Daddy Jacques good night. She had to pass behind my desk and the door to enter her chamber, and she could do this only with some difficulty—that is to say, I was very near the place where the crime occurred later."

"And the desk?" I asked, obeying, in thus mixing myself in the conversation, the express orders of my chief. "As soon as you heard the cry of 'Murder!' followed by the revolver shots, what became of the desk?"

Daddy Jacques answered.

"We pushed it back against the wall here, close to where it is at the present moment, so as to be able to get at the door at once."

I followed up my reasoning, to which, however, I attached but little importance, regarding it as only a weak hypothesis, with another question.

"Might not a man in the room, the desk being so near to the door, by stooping and slipping under the desk have left it unobserved?"

"You are forgetting," interrupted M. Stangerson wearily, "that my daughter had locked and bolted the door, that the door had remained fastened, that we vainly tried to force it open when we heard the noise and that we were at the door while the struggle between the murderer and my poor child was going on immediately after we heard her stifled cries."

I rose from my seat and once more examined the door with the greatest care. Then I returned to my place, with a despairing gesture.

"If the lower panel of the door," I said, "could be removed without the whole door being necessarily open the problem would be solved. But unfortunately that last hypothesis is untenable after an examination of the door. It's of oak, solid and massive. You can see that quite plainly in spite of the injury done in the attempt to burst it open."

"Ah," cried Daddy Jacques, "it is an old and solid door that was brought from the chateau. They don't make such doors now. We had to use this bar of iron to get it open, all four of us, for the concierge, brave woman she is, helped us. It pains me to find them both in prison now."

Daddy Jacques had no sooner uttered these words of pity and protestation than tears and lamentations broke out from the concierges. I never saw two accused people crying more bitterly. I was extremely disgusted. Even if they were innocent, I could not understand how they could behave like that in the face of misfortune. A dignified bearing at such times is better than tears and groans, which most often are feigned.

"Now, then, enough of that sniveling," cried M. de Marquet, "and in your interest tell us what you were doing under the windows of the pavilion at the time your mistress was being attacked, for you were close to the pavilion when Daddy Jacques met you."

"We were coming to help!" they whined.

"If we could only lay hands on the murderer he'd never taste bread again!" the woman gurgled between her sobs.

As before, we were unable to get two connecting thoughts out of them. They persisted in their denials and swore by heaven and all the saints that they were in bed when they heard the sound of the revolver shot.

"It was not one, but two shots, that were fired. You see you are lying. If you had heard one you would have heard the other."

"Mon Dieu! Monsieur, it was the second shot we heard. We were sound asleep when the first shot was fired."

"Two shots were fired," said Daddy Jacques. "I am certain that all the cartridges were in my revolver. We found afterward that two had been exploded, and we heard two shots behind the door. Was not that so, M. Stangerson?"

"Yes," replied the professor, "there were two shots—one dull and the other sharp and ringing."

"Why do you persist in lying?" cried M. de Marquet, turning to the concierges. "Do you think the police are the fools you are? Everything points to the fact that you were out of doors and near the pavilion at the time of the tragedy. What were you doing there? So far as I am concerned," he said, turning to M. Stangerson, "I can only explain the escape of the murderer on the assumption of help from these two accomplices. As soon as the door was forced open and while you, M. Stangerson, were occupied with your unfortunate child the concierge and his wife facilitated the flight of the murderer, who, screening himself behind them, reached the window in the vestibule and sprang out of it into the park. The concierge closed the window after him and fastened the blinds, which certainly could not have closed and fastened of themselves. That is the conclusion I have arrived at. If any one here has any other idea let him state it."

M. Stangerson intervened:

"What you say was impossible. I do not believe either in the guilt or in the connivance of my concierges, though I cannot understand what they were doing in the park at that late hour of the night. I say it was impossible, because Mme. Bernier held the lamp and did not move from the threshold of the room, because I as soon as the door was forced open threw myself on my knees beside my daughter, and no one could have left or entered the room by the door without passing over her body and forcing his way by me! Daddy Jacques and the concierge had but to cast a glance around the chamber and under the bed, as I had done on entering, to see that there was nobody in it but my daughter lying on the floor."

"What do you think, M. Darzac?" asked the magistrate.

M. Darzac replied that he had no opinion to express.

M. Dax, the chief of police, who so far had been listening and examining the room, at length deigned to open his lips:

"While search is being made for the criminal we had better try to find out the motive for the crime. That will advance us a little," he said. Turning toward M. Stangerson, he continued in the even, intelligent tone indicative of a strong character, "I understand that mademoiselle was shortly to have been married?"

The professor looked sadly at M. Robert Darzac.

"With my friend here, whom I should have been happy to call my son—with M. Robert Darzac."

"Mlle. Stangerson is much better and is rapidly recovering from her wounds. The marriage is simply delayed, is it not, monsieur?" insisted the chief of police.

"I hope so."

"What! Is there any doubt about that?"

M. Stangerson did not answer. M. Robert Darzac seemed agitated. I saw that his hand trembled as it fingered his watch chain. M. Dax coughed, as did M. de Marquet. Both were evidently embarrassed.

"You understand, M. Stangerson," he said, "that in an affair so perplexing as this we cannot neglect anything. We must know all, even the smallest and seemingly most futile thing concerning the victim, information apparently the most insignificant. Why do you doubt that this marriage will take place? You expressed a hope, but the hope implies a doubt. Why do you doubt?"

M. Stangerson made a visible effort to recover himself.

"Yes, monsieur," he said at length. "You are right. It will be best that you should know something which if I concealed it might appear to be of importance. M. Darzac agrees with me in this."

M. Darzac, whose pallor at that moment seemed to me to be altogether abnormal, made a sign of assent. I gathered he was unable to speak.

"I want you to know, then," continued M. Stangerson, "that my daughter has sworn never to leave me and adheres firmly to her oath in spite of all my prayers and all that I have argued to induce her to marry. We have known M. Robert Darzac many years. He loves my child, and I believed that she loved him, because she only recently consented to this marriage, which I desire with all my heart. I am an old man, monsieur, and it was a happy hour to me when I knew that after I had gone she would have at her side one who loved her and who would help her in continuing our common labors. I love and esteem M. Darzac both for his greatness of heart and for his devotion to science. But two days before the tragedy, for I know not what reason, my daughter declared to me that she would never marry M. Darzac."

A dead silence followed M. Stangerson's words. It was a moment fraught with suspense.

"Did mademoiselle give you any explanation—did she tell you what her motive was?" asked M. Dax.

"She told me she was too old to marry; that she had waited too long. She said she had given much thought to the matter, and while she had a great esteem, even affection, for M. Darzac she felt it would be better if things remained as they were."

"That is very strange," muttered M. Dax.

"Strange!" repeated M. de Marquet.

"You'll certainly not find the motive there, M. Dax," M. Stangerson said, with a cold smile.

"In any case, the motive was not theft," said the chief impatiently.

"Oh, we are quite convinced of that!" exclaimed the examining magistrate.

At that moment the door of the laboratory opened, and the officer in charge of the gendarmes entered and handed a card to the examining magistrate. M. de Marquet read it and uttered a half angry exclamation.

"This is really too much!" he cried.

"What is it?" asked the chief.

"It's the card of a young reporter engaged on the Epoque, a M. Joseph Rouletabille. It has these words written on it, "One of the motives of the crime was robbery."

The chief smiled.

"Ah, young Rouletabille! I've heard of him. He is considered rather clever. Let him come in."

M. Joseph Rouletabille entered the laboratory, bowed to us and waited for M. de Marquet to ask him to explain his presence.

"You pretend, monsieur, that you know the motive for the crime and that that motive—in the face of all the evidence that has been forthcoming—was robbery?"

"No, monsieur; I do not pretend that. I do not say that robbery was the motive for the crime, and I don't believe it was."

"Then what is the meaning of this card?"

"It means that robbery was one of the motives for the crime."

"What leads you to think that?"

"If you will be good enough to accompany me I will show you."

To be Continued.

WEDDING BELLS

MILBURN—STEVENS.

Weddings among popular Peterborough young people have been very numerous this month, but none were marked by more ideal weather conditions, and were attended by more out-of town guests than was the wedding of Miss Olive Irene Stevens and Mr. Oliver Milburn, of Perth, which was solemnized at two o'clock this afternoon at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. G. L. Stevens, 631 George street.

Both bride and groom are widely known in Peterborough. The groom conducted a jewellery store here for some time, and was connected with the Belmont Club before leaving the city.

The ceremony was performed in the parlor, which was very artistically decorated for the occasion with green and white floral trimmings.

The bride was attired in a beautiful gown of duchess satin with train, and a pearl garniture veil hemmed with pearls, and a band of pearls and orange blossoms, and carried a large shower bouquet of lilies-of-the-valley, roses and orchids.

Mrs. Stevens' gown was of tan satin palate, with jet trimmings.

Mr. Jack Hopwood, of Toronto, was best man.

The groom's present to the bride was a pearl necklace, to the bridesmaid a hoop of diamonds, and to the best man, a solitaire pin.

Mrs. Dayman played Mendelssohn's wedding march, and Miss Flossie Scott sang very sweetly "Love it is Morn." They were the recipients respectively of a pearl brooch, and a moonstone ring from the groom.

Master Farron Stevens made a very bright little page.

The ceremony was performed by the Rev. J. M. Wesely, of Campbellford, an intimate friend of the family.

The very costly and numerous gifts testified to the popularity enjoyed by the bride and groom.

The beautiful wedding cake was the gift of Robinson Bros., Toronto.

The guests from a distance were, Mrs. J. M. Milburn, Mr. George Milburn, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Milburn, Dr. J. A. Milburn, Miss Edna Yeoman, Mr. and Mrs. Harold Wilkinson, Mr. and Mrs. D. W. Jones, Mr. Walter Winter, all of Toronto; Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Stevens, Mr. and Mrs. James Dayman, Mr. and Mrs. N. E. Gould, Miss Ida Gould, Mrs. Gordon, of Bowmanville, and Mr. J. Birmingham and Miss Jennie Owen, of Campbellford.

Mr. and Mrs. Milburn left for Muskoka for a month's stay and will then go to Fairy Cottage, Rideau, for the remainder of the summer. Their home will be in Perth.

The bride's travelling suit was of tan rajah with hat to match.

The heartiest wishes for a happy and prosperous future will go with Mr. and Mrs. Milburn.

McLEAN—McTAGGART.

A quiet wedding was solemnized at St. Paul's manse this morning at ten o'clock by Rev. R. Pogue, when Miss Lydia McTaggart, of Brockville, was united in marriage to Mr. Alexander Lean, of Beachburg, Renfrew county. Mr. and Mrs. McLean left on the 11.28 C.P.R. train for their home

MISS CHOATE PRESENTED WITH TWO GOLD MEDALS

At Conservatory Closing Concert—An Excellent Program by Conservatory Talent and the Orchestra—Judge Huycke's Congratulations

The Conservatory of Music Hall was well filled last night, about 250 people being present to attend the first night of the closing exercises. Pupils of Miss Newman, Miss Adamson and Mr. Gliddon gave excellent interpretations of difficult compositions, and the entire program was given in such a finished and well executed style that great praise can be given to the efforts of the faculty in their work of producing students, who are not only a credit to the teachers, but to the city of Peterborough as well.

The orchestra, under the leadership of Mr. Gliddon, gave some selections which were well received, and their work showed the result that can be obtained by training. At no time was there a discord in evidence, in fact throughout the entire program the ear was not once offended by an absence of harmony.

Previous to the last number Judge Huycke congratulated the Conservatory on its successful closing program, and said the people little realized what good work the Conservatory was doing.

His Honor stated that Canada was very fortunate in having a Governor-General who was a patron of arts and music.

He presented Miss Julia Choate with Ald. Gillespie's violin medal, the highest honors for a Conservatory pupil, and also with the silver medal, the second highest prize in the Earl Grey competition. Judge Huycke spoke in high praise of Ald. Gillespie for the commendable interest he had shown in presenting the handsome gold medal.

Mr. Gliddon warmly thanked Judge Huycke for his offices in connection with the concert, which were warmly appreciated.

The program was as follows:—

PLACED ON THE BLACKLIST AT HIS OWN REQUEST

This morning, an unmarried man, who unfortunately is addicted to the drink habit, applied to the Magistrate to be placed on the blacklist. He had been on the prohibited list before, and to His Worship he made a statement to the effect that he had been greatly benefitted by being placed on the list. He acknowledged that he did not have the strength of mind to leave liquor alone, and he had of late been spending the hard earned money which he had saved while on the list in the first case.

The Magistrate made out the order.

FAR FROM MADDING CROWD

Sunday school children could not have produced more fun, nor could a gathering of deacons been more sedate at times than the august assemblage of ingathered wisdom that took the boat "Monarch" for Gore's Landing, yesterday afternoon.

It was a hot day, and in regard of the occasion the sun rested behind a cloud.

The affair was the annual exchange of courtesies between the doctors and lawyers, with the former as the hosts.

IT WAS CRUEL.

But it was cruel the way the hosts were treated. The affair took place in the village meadow beneath the shadow of a hill, upon the tallest tree of which sat an audience of crows. Taking his life in his hands, Mr. Peter Campbell, manager of the Bank of Toronto, acted as General Factotem, and that the event was not more sanguinary, is due to his rare presence of mind in crying "Hold, enough!" at the end of the first round.

A SLAUGHTER.

The spectacle went under the name of baseball, but it was a slaughter, the slaughter of the innocents.

The mountain hiding on one side, side, and a heavy bush on the other, the combatants stripped as much as the village statutes permitted, and commenced.

THOSE WHO TOOK PART.

The medical gentlemen who, in their heart of hearts, believe with the celebrated Dr. Hall that fun is better than physic, took to the grass first. The green could not be called a golf links nor a croquet lawn, but it was large, and largeness was the necessary feature. Dr. Cameron stood on the slab and administered the pills with a gentleman with the also historic name of MacPherson to receive them. The others were: Marshall, 1b; Hammond, 2b; Morgan, 3b; Frederick, ss; McCullough, lf; Bradburn, cf; Amys, rf.

THE LEGAL LIGHTS.

The gentlemen who wielded the club for the legals were: McIlroy, c; Giroux, p; Cross, 1b; Craig, 2b; Ackerman, 3b; Ruddy, ss; Laplante cf; Davidson, lf; Pickup, rf.

HAAG'S CIRCUS OUTDONE

Acrobatic features were the order of the hour. High jumps, somersaults, spread eagle, and the human flying machine being among the number. Once there was a delay, a mighty swatsman knocked the ball out of the lot, and it was feared that a pig had eaten it; but a brave rescue was made and the slaughter resumed.

THE SCORE.

When the runs were added up in the first innings it was found that the lawyers had won by 12 to 6, and time was called.

THE BANQUET.

The banquet at Gore's Landing at Inn of Host Harris, was unique. The spread was wholesome and tasty, and appreciated by victor and vanquished alike. There were no speeches, just music by a selected quartette, who were in fine fettle and loosed songs, old and new, into the ears of the hungry crowd.

HOMEWARD BOUND.

The "Monarch" pointed her way home at 7.30, and the day was pronounced ideal, the site splendid, the trip immense.

Among those present as guests were Mayor Morrow, ex-Mayor Rush, Postmaster Stratton, and many other well known gentlemen.

A BIG FISH.

And last, but not least was Steward Jayes, who lookes after the physical needs of the excursionists, and caught a five-pound fish at the pier in Rice Lake.

WARDEN'S ADDRESS AT JUNE COUNTY COUNCIL SESSION

The address of Warden Frank Moher, to the members of the County Council yesterday afternoon at the opening session is as follows:

WARDEN'S ADDRESS.

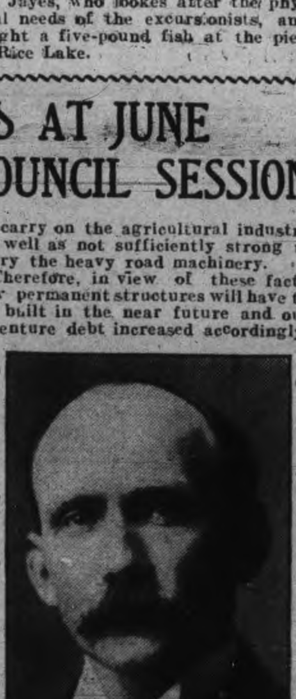
To the Members of the County Council:

Gentlemen,—As is expected of your Warden, this, our regular June session, I beg to address you upon matters of importance that have been taken up by you, and those which will probably occupy your attention for the balance of the year. Before doing so I, with all Briutish subjects, refer to the death of King Edward VII. as the loss keenly felt of the whole empire, and repeat what has so often been said so many times that his reign has been one of progress and peace, largely due to his qualifications as a monarch.

I also beg to refer to the material progress of our country, and the bright prospects of a bountiful harvest. For some years the council of this county has been considering the advisability of installing an up-to-date system of heating for the county buildings, and the 1910 council, after careful deliberation have ordered the installing of the steam plant that is now under way.

As you are aware, it is agitated that counties assume bridges of a lesser length than heretofore, and the old bridges now under the jurisdiction of the county are in a great many instances inadequate to carry the heavy machinery that is necessary to carry on the agricultural industry as well as not sufficiently strong to carry the heavy road machinery.

Therefore, in view of these facts, new permanent structures will have to be built in the near future and our debenture debt increased accordingly.



WARDEN MOHER.

Yet it is, I believe, our aim to confine the adding of bonded debt to a point where liquidation will not materially affect the date.

In referring to the Order in Council as to bridge work this season, I will not, if possible, interfere with the reports of the several commissioners that will be brought in at the fall session, but permit me to draw your attention to the Pigeon Creek bridge, and I would suggest that those councillors that have seen the bridge this summer bring the matter up in committee. The bridge is maintained by three municipalities, Peterborough county, 7-20ths; Peterborough city, 7-20ths, and Victoria county, 6-20ths, so you will see that if anything of a permanent character is undertaken I would advise that a joint committee from each municipality meet to determine what shall be done.

Having had the privilege of driving through considerable of the county, in response to the duties of warden, I must say that the systems of road building carried on at present by the pathmasters under the statute labor system and by the commissioners, where statute labor has been commuted, is very much superior to that carried on some years ago, and I firmly believe that much of the improvement is due to the interest taken by both local and county councils.

I am pleased to note that as far as I can see our rate for the House of Refuge will be lower than last year, and although our duties and business are increasing, very little more money on the whole will be asked from municipalities.

Matters of finance will be dealt with by the chairman of the Finance Committee, whose painstaking efforts always result in satisfaction being given. The debentures just issued for the various purposes cited in the by-law will, I trust, be disposed of to the satisfaction of all. The chairman of the County Property Committee will no doubt lay before you all the steps that have been taken up to the present, so that all will be familiar with what is taking place now, supplementing it with the second report at the fall session.

Permit me again to thank you for the honor you have conferred upon me by placing me in the chair during 1910, and I heartily thank you one and all for your forbearance and able assistance since I took office, and ask you for a continuance of the same.

Wishing you and the county prosperity.

I am,

Yours respectfully,

FRANK MOHER.

On motion of Councillor Shaw, Councillors Breault, Graham, Porter, Howden, Darling, and Garbutt were appointed a committee to deal with the address.

Several matters were taken up and the Council adjourned to go into committee.

At this morning's session the report of the committee on the Warden's address was read and adopted and several communications were referred to their respective committees.

The full report of the proceedings will be found in the Weekly Review.

VIAMEDE NEWS

Special to the Review.

Viamede, June 22.—Though the fishing season has barely begun the new "Viamede" has opened for what promises to be an unusually lively season.

The old guard of fishing enthusiasts from Rochester turned out bright and early on the morning of June 16th, and the waiting fish welcomed their coming. From the cool rocky haunts and the weedy stretches just up the "Viamede" shore, where maskinonge abound, hardly a day passes without fine strings being brought in, the weighing in by a third party is always solemnly performed before witnesses.

Someone has remarked that for perfect fishing one has merely to consult a railway or summer resort prospectus, and dark tales are current of ancient photogravures of enormous catches used year after year to advertise localities where fish have long since departed. Any enterprising photographer whose specialty is summer resorts, could find a season's material for his halftone plates in the past week's catch at "Viamede."

To quote the grandaddy of all our fishermen—he is seventy-three and spends all day with his rod and reel getting the big ones—"in ten years we have never had better fishing."

The sudden intense heat of the city can scarcely be realized here in the green coolness of the woods by Stoney Lake, nor could there be a greater contrast to the dusty glare of superheated asphalt than the broad inviting expanses of island-dotted waters seen from our easy chairs on the hotel verandah. So far we have found "Viamede" ideal. The following Rochester people are registered at "Viamede;"

Messrs. W. S. Firman, H. M. Webb, G. W. Johnson, G. W. Kirkpatrick, G. N. Crosby, P. C. Shutt and Mrs. Shutt, Mrs. G. N. Crosby, Mrs. Martin, Mrs. Hopeman and Miss Hopeman, Mr. H. S. Cosman, Hilton, N.Y.; Dr. and Mrs. Gality and the Misses Gality, Las Vegas, N.M., U.S.A., Professor and Mrs. Glenn, H. Campbell, wife and child, Toronto; Dr. and Mrs. W. A. Barker, Syracuse, N.Y.; Mr. and Mrs. T. A. Craig, Toronto.

THEFT CHARGE A MISTAKE

The Jewish colony of this fair city was fairly well represented at this morning's session of the police court, when David Florence, jr., was charged with stealing a quantity or iron from Abraham Low.

There was a mistake however. It appears that the steamer Rainbow had brought up one ton and a half of junk and one of the officers of the boat, on reaching here, at once telephoned to Florence to have the cargo removed. The male members of the firm were absent at the time and the bookkeeper gave the necessary orders for the removal of the iron.

The iron had been assigned to Abraham Low and the mistake had been made when the officers of the boat telephoned to Florence, who, by the way was also expecting to receive a quantity of junk.

Low, afterwards, it is alleged, found some of the iron on the Florence premises and not being "in right" laid a complaint. Later he found he was mistaken and an effort was made by the two men to straighten matters up. They succeeded, and then made another mistake. They forgot to be on hand at the proper time this morning. It looked like an attempt to run the court and his Worship didn't like it, but with the assistance of Mr. G. N. Gordon and Mr. E. L. Goodwill, who appeared for the defendant and complainant respectively, the clouds were cleared.

The Magistrate ordered that the parties pay the costs of $4.

MIGHTY HAAG SHOWS WIN APPROVAL EVERYWHERE

Although the weather was very unsettled yesterday, the Mighty Haag Shows gave two performances, afternoon and evening, and at each performance the shows received a large and well deserved patronage. The acrobatic performances were of a high class, there being stunts not usually seen in these shows. The show also has a fine lot of ponies and monkeys to please the children, besides the herd of performing elephants, tigers, hyenas, bears and several other animals, including the horned horse. In fact the show is one of the cleanest and best ever exhibiting here.

Mr. E. Haag, the owner of the show, is a very pleasant southern gentleman, his home being in Shreveport, La., and he is connected with several enterprises in that city.

If any show deserved patronage in the south it is one owned by southern people, and those visiting the Haag Shows may rest assured that they will receive fair treatment and get their money's worth.

The show leaves the city this morning for Mockville, where two performances will be given to-morrow—Winston Salem Journal, Winston, Salem, N.C.

"SEVEN DAYS" WILL LIKELY OPEN THEATRICAL SEASON

It seems a little too remindful of the approaching fall and long, cold winter to talk about the threatical season in humid June, but the Peterborough playgoers will no doubt be glad to know of some of the attractions that will be here next season.

From present indications the local season will open on September 10th with the comedy that has made New York take notice during the past few months—"Seven Days." Of course, it is quite possible that another curtain raiser may be booked for an earlier date.

One of the musical spectacles of the season will be "The Cat and the Fiddle," a pantomine extravaganza built on large lines.

The other bookings to date are Guy's Minstrels, "Ole Oleson" and "The Vulture."

POLICE EXPECTED TO FIND WOMAN DEAD

Acting Chief Adams and P.C. Meharry paid a visit to the home of Miss Steele, at 413 London street, this afternoon at the request of several neighbors, who feared that the occupant was dead, and after being refused admission to the house, they forced an entrance and found the lady alive, but not in the best of health.

Since Friday the efforts of the neighbors to get into the house were unsuccessful. They were at first turned away, and of late the door has been locked, and to-day it was suspected that Miss Steele, who is an elderly lady, might be dead.

The police were notified and their visit resulted as noted above.

Rev. J. G. Potter is now looking after the case.

Six hundred and thirty tickets were sold by the respective city league clubs, and of this number, Mr. Fred McGrath sold through his own efforts, four hundred and three and paid in $87.55 to the secretary of the league.

This was "going some," if the expression might be used here, and Fred's work on behalf of the league is very much appreciated.

STRATHCONAS AND P. A. C. T. A. S. AND WEST ENDS

Saturday's City League program will be made up with a meeting between the Strathconas and P.A.C at o'clock, and another affair between the T.A.S and West Ends. Something seems to say that there will be more than the usual doings in these two contests. The Strathconas have simply got to win from the south end team, and the West Ends find themselves in a similar position. Both will be merry fights all the way, "and leave it to us," says Managers Metheral and Dobson, "to see that there are no dead ones on our line-ups."

"Is Quinlan going back?" asks some of the fans who were on hand at the All Star-T.A.S game last Saturday. Well, hardly not, but it must be considered that a pitcher who has to work against batters who have to no small degree unravelled the mysteries of his curves, is bound to get touched up, and as the West Ends have a number of players handy with the willow, there will in all probability be some more swatting in this Saturday's game. There is no reason why there should not be a big crowd at the games.

Y.M.C.A. NOTES

Two more events were run off at the oval last night in the Stratton Cup athletic contest, the 12 lb. shot put, and standing high jump. There was a mistake made in the distance of the half mile and it will be run off later. W. Currie and S. Hill were tied in the shot put with 27ft. 4 in; S. Hill winning the standing high jump with a jump of 4ft. 4in; W. Flowers was second with 3ft. 10in.; W. Taylor, third, with 3ft. 7in.

At Riverside Park yesterday the "Y" juvenile baseball team defeated the Young Cubs in a very fast game by a score of 2 to 1. These two teams clash again on Thursday after school. The "Y" team follows;—Cavanah, L. Pierson, Armstrong, Sharpe, Laing, V. Pierson, Canniff, Morris, Parker.

HE WOULDN'T BRAY TODAY.

When Alexander Selkirk posed
And claimed to be the all
Of everything that lives and moves
On this terrestrial ball
'Tis very plain his better half
Was not like those today
Or he would not have blowed himself
And got off such a bray.

'Tis plain he never helped clean house
Nor saw a holiday,
When women take men by the neck
And make them big bills pay.
Nor had he bought a Paris hat
And mortgaged all he had for that.
O Alex, smart; O Alex, gay,
You wouldn't have so much to say,

Especially if her mother came!
She would your domineering tame,
And a new baby in one night
Would knock your conceit out of sight.
You men of this smart Alex style
Had better hunt a desert isle,
For if you're snared by woman new
She'll sweetly stoop and conquer you.

CROSSING EMBDEN, TOULOUSE AND OTHER GEESE.

Whenever you see a gander on the green there rises to your lips that old question. "Goosey, goosey, gander, where do you wander?"

Well, if you ever mate a White Embden gander and a Gray Toulouse goose and raise the green gosling rubbernecks to the age of the original of our picture (seven months) when you take a birdseye view of the tender offspring you will wonder where the shape and style of the old gander and goose went, for the only resemblance you'll see will be in the white and gray markings. Nevertheless it's a good cross for market purposes.

Both of these big breeds run to fat, which is shown by the dewlap under the chin and the abdomen dragging on the ground.

The Toulouse, too, is rather flabby and coarse of flesh. But, strange to relate, by this cross you get a fowl of graceful lines and finer, firmer fibered flesh.

This makes a more popular fowl, for market buyers aren't after goose grease, and you can imagine there's grease to burn when the gander and goose of these breeds weigh twenty and eighteen pounds respectively.

The other geese mostly used for commercial purposes are Gray African, White and Brown Chinese and the Canadian or wild. These are much different from the Toulouse and Embden, the Gray African only equaling them in size, the African and Chinese having big knobs on their heads and the Canadian being a sort of missing link between the duck and goose.

Good crosses are made by mating Canadian or Embden gander with African, and Embden gander with White China.

Geese should only be crossed for market purposes, and pure bred fowls should only be mated. Such offspring are called mongrels and mules. Mules do not breed, and those who confidently expect to breed something wonderful from their mixed geese seldom get eggs to set, and when such an exception occurs the eggs are invariably infertile.

DON'TS.

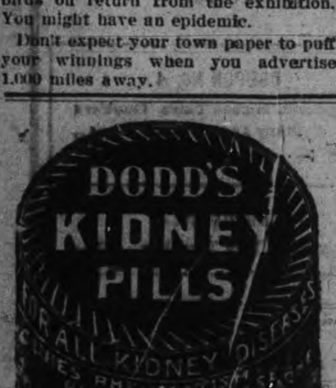
Don't say you value your hen at $1,000. Such homemade opinions look awfully cheap.

Don't fail to quarantine your show birds on return from the exhibition. You might have an epidemic.

Don't expect your town paper to puff your winnings when you advertise 1,000 miles away.



CARE OF LITTLE THINGS.

A Lesson For American Women In French Thrift.

Were the American woman as careful of little things as is the thrifty Frenchwoman her reputation for economy would grow as her possessions increased.

Our French sisters take personal care of their own small belongings. They would just as soon trust a kerchief to a laundress as they would the piece of rare old family lace.

French thrift demands that the merest bit of sheer linen lasts its allotted time, and that it shall do so requires that great pains be taken with it. If madame has a maid, then she must be thoroughly instructed as to her duties along this line, and handkerchiefs are expected to be her special charge. If, however, the little menage does not boast of such a luxury as a personal maid, then madame must do her own washing.

In the first place, her handkerchiefs are never allowed to become unduly soiled and after once using are put into a small linen bag that always hangs beside the toilet table. When half a dozen or more have been collected they are put to soak in an earthen bowl filled with cool water and suds made from the best of washing soap. In this they should remain for half an hour, after which they are carefully rinsed in more cool water. Then comes the thorough washing of them in hot water in which a spoonful of borax has been dissolved. This is done as gently as possible by patting and rubbing, and for this last many women use a child's toy washboard, which is exactly the right size for the purpose. In this way no threads of the fine material are broken, a disaster which is difficult to remedy. The final rinsing is also done through many cool waters until every particle of soap is gone, and then comes the climax of the entire performance.

The handkerchiefs are placed in a bowl of milk into which have been put a few drops of essence of violet, which is strong and of a bluish tinge, and this will give to them the pure white color which is so necessary. From this each is taken and partially dried in a clean towel and at once ironed. No starch is used, for the milk takes the place of that, and the little ironing board is covered first with a heavy flannel and afterward with a spotlessly clean piece of white cloth.

An iron is kept especially for this work, and usually this is some patent affair either for electricity or alcohol. To do this all properly will take an hour or more of madam's time, but she feels herself more than repaid for that by the results seen. The little pile of handkerchiefs will come from her hands as if fresh from the shelves of a shop, and they will have the delicate fragrance of having lain in a violet sachet. Anything daintier and more satisfying to the eye it would be hard to imagine, and any woman who cares for these pretty trifles could not help but take a certain amount of pleasure in this kind of work.

The New Pincushion.

The large sized bureau pincushion is no more. It has been succeeded by the china or beaten brass pin tray or more frequently by a shallow silver dish to

Little cushions are made for brooches, and many are the methods for the accomplishment of them. They demand, each and all of them, a tiny satin covered cushion as a foundation—satin because the glint of it will help out the exterior and becausse, being glossy, it will take the dust less quickly than the duller silks.

Now, pincushions are covered in various ways. Those of scrim with the cross stitching upon their tops are of original design as to the patterns. Roses upon the cushion illustrated are cross stitched upon the regular weave of the creamy scrim in fine mercerized cotton of a dull rose and leafy green. The conventional lines of a prim butterfly on the other are worked in the same exquisitely small stitch in pale yellow, with a dull blue spot on each wing. Top and bottom of the cushion are joined by hemstitching.

AIRSHIP PROPELLERS.

They Are Built Up of Layers of Selected Wood.

Propellers for airships are built of laminated wood—that is to say, of wood built up in layers.

For the making of a propeller six or eight feet in length there would be required to begin with a stick of timber six inches or thereabout square, and such a stick of solid wood, however perfectly seasoned, might check or crack. For this reason the propeller is built of laminated wood, of strips of selected and perfectly seasoned wood of the required width, which are planed down to the requisite thickness and then glued together under pressure, making a practically solid stick.

Some airship propellers of laminated wood have been made with the laminations all of spruce. One New York concern making propellers produces them also of a combination of ash and mahogany.

The shaving out of the blades from this stick, each of precisely the required taper, pitch and thinness and the two exactly alike, is work that calls for the greatest patience, care and skill. The perfect propeller in its finished state is a beautiful example of good workmanship.

A six foot propeller of laminated wood, its weight six and a half pounds, costs $50; a seven foot propeller, weight nine pounds, $60, and an eight foot propeller, twelve pounds, $70.

For model airships there are made, also of laminated wood, but these commonly all of mahogany, little propellers from ten to twelve inches in length and accurate in pitch and finish. They sell at from $1 to $7.

Among the full sized propellers the greatest demand is for those measuring seven feet. From the orders thus far filled and now in hand the propeller makers are looking for a greater activity than ever in flying machines in the coming season.—New York Sun.

Sham Jewelry.

"This is the age of sham and make believe in the jewelry world," says a woman writing in the Fremdenblatt, "and the people who have any doubt on that score should go to Paris and be convinced. The makers of imitations are turning out better work than ever before, and the easily detected sham has faded away before articles which baffle many people. The 'superior quality' of these alleged jewels has made women courageous. They go in ankle deep with a small pin, and when they feel sure that the deception is undiscovered they wade with a brooch and, rejoicing in the sensation, are soon in deep water with a diadem. They are not cheap, these latter day gems, but they are within the reach of the people who wish to shine by their luster. The housemaid may wear them by sacrificing her savings, but on her person they would quickly be recognized. In that respect the mistress has the advantage over the maid."

Great Guns.

Sir A. Trevor Dawson makes this comparison to show the great strides made in modern ordnance in forty-five years: In 1864 the most powerful twelve inch gun was a muzzle loader, 12 calibers long, weighing 23.5 tons, using a charge of 85 pounds of powder and discharging a projectile of 614 pounds with a muzzle velocity of 3,000 feet per second. It could perforate 16 inches of wrought iron at the muzzle and 8 inches at a range of 6,000 yards. In 1909 the twelve inch gun had become a breechloader, 50 calibers long, weighing 70 tons, using a projectile of 850 pounds discharged with a muzzle velocity of 3,000 feet per second and capable of penetrating 52 inches of wrought iron at the muzzle, 37 inches at a distance of 6,000 yards and 17.5 inches at 24,000 yards.

Misfit Names.

Talking of family names, the new issue of the London directory provides some curiosities. Sebastian Bach is a horse dealer, Robert Bruce and John Bunyan are greengrocers, John Milton is a chandler and James Boswell a mason. William Shakespeare is the name of a barrister, a tailor and a van builder. There is a Crusoe and also a Gulliver. Julius Caesar is a chemist, Livy keeps apartments, Homer is a lighterman, Pinder an electrical engineer. Mars retails beer, and Venus, not inappropriately, sugar candies. Francis Bacon is an architect and Bayard a dairyman. And what could be better for the name of a saddler than Whippy?—Square Deal.

The Banana In Paris.

The banana has become popular in Paris and is sold freely in the streets. The increasing popularity of the fruit is amply justified, says a Paris paper, for Dr. Max Makowsky in Naturopath gives the following analysis of the fruit: 4.75 per cent of carbureted hydrogen, 19.50 per cent of alimentary salts, 1.75 per cent of cellulose and 74 per cent of water. The doctor adds that all that is necessary for sustenance can be obtained from the banana and bread and butter. The Parisian journal suggests that it would be interesting to know upon what the doctor himself subsists.

The New Compass.

For the purpose of securing clearness, simplicity and precision in the application of compass errors the hydrographic office of the United States navy has adopted a new form of compass on which there is no north, south, east or west, but which consists of a circle divided into 360 degrees, beginning with 0 at the true north point and reading to the right.—Popular Mechanics.

THE MILKY WAY.

A Hundred Million Stars Gleam In That Silvery Scarf.

The census of the starry sky is concerned almost entirely with the Milky way. The number of stars not connected with it is negligible. But when you look at the Milky way the idea of numbering its stars seems the dream of a madman. It stretches all round the sky. Its extent is so unthinkably immense that science has never undertaken to measure it, and the imagination could not grasp the figures that such a measurement, if it was possible to make it, would involve.

Yet that whole enormous expanse of space occupied by the Milky way is so crowded with stars that they make upon the eye the impression of a silvery scarf wound round the brow of the universe.

It requires a telescope to see them as a broad zone of glittering points instead of an almost uniform band of whiteness in the firmament.

In some places they are more thinly scattered, so that, as you gaze through the glass, you almost think that, with infinite patience, you might count the number included in a space as large as the face of the moon.

But in other places they seem to be packed together like the sands of the seashore. They stretch away over thousands of square degrees of space, hanging in great festoons, spreading out in vast banners, where billions upon billions of cubic miles seem to be filled with stars thicker than the flakes in a driving snowstorm!

There are begemmed knots in that starry scarf so rich that the eye is dazzled and the mind confused by the spectacle which they present.

Yet science, although it shrinks from trying to estimate the space which they occupy, has succeeded in forming a fairly correct enumeration of the stars of the Milky way.

The most extravagant estimates do not put the number at more than 300,000,000, and the most trustworthy and probable make them a third less.

A hundred million stars, then, is the total population of the glittering universe, and when we see what a marvelous effect of innumerableness they produce we begin to appreciate what a hundred millions mean.—Garrett P. Serviss in New York American.

MAN'S THREE DUTIES.

I have made a code for my own guidance which may interest you. I hold that a man's first duty is to be a good husband, which implies, of course, that he ought to marry and then make his wife believe, if he can, that she has been the most fortunate of women.

It isn't easy—but, my, how it pays!

He must be lover, husband, son and even father by turns and occasionally just nobody—he must get clear off the earth. But when he comes back—

A man's second duty is to be a good father, which implies, of course, that he ought to have children—adopted, if necessary. He ought to be to them the standard by which all other men are measured and found wanting, because he is their daddy and they love him.

A man's third duty is to be a good neighbor, to carry his share, no matter how small or how great it may be, of the community's worthy enterprises, to share the sorrows and the joys of those around him, to make his home a real asset to his community.

After a man has done these three things, if he has time and means and strength, he can and should think in wider circles. But the man who does these three well is doing more than if he contributed millions and neglected these three. The man who neglects his wife or his children or his neighbors, no matter what other apparently great things he may have done, will hear Gabriel's trumpet very faintly if at all on the morning of the great day.—Erman J. Ridgway in Delineator.

When the Mule Kicks.

"No man unless he is blind should ever be kicked by a mule. There is no excuse for it. If kicked he is as much to blame as the mule," said a mule raiser. "A mule never kicks without first wagging his ears and switching his tail," said the breeder. "All you have to do is to keep your eyes on his ears and tail. And when he begins to wag his ears or switch his tail then it is time to dodge. And if you dodge quickly you will never be touched."—Kansas City Journal.

A Cold Bite.

"You were twenty miles from the north pole and starving!" exclaimed the credulous housewife. "And how did you save yourself?"

"Why, mum," responded Frigid Fred as he wiped away a tear, "in me starving moments I remembered de Eskimo dogs. Pushing out through the snow, I twisted one of der tails, an' den—an' den"—

"And then what, my poor man?"

"I got a cold bite."—Chicago News.

WAIL OF THE HOUSE BUYER.

Last year I paid a landlord rent,
And when the days of spring came back
Unto that gentleman I went
And told him to repair the shack.
I bade him paint the kitchen floor
And decorate the bedrooms, too;
I bade him tint the dining room
And make the place as good as new.

Last fall I found a house I liked
And paid two hundred dollars down
And twenty-five a month as well.
The plan is one of great renown;
The house is mine or will be when
I've paid for what the contract calls.
This spring, alas, it's up to me
To decorate the parlor walls!

There is no landlord now to whom
I may appeal for spring repairs.
We need a coat of varnish on
The parlor floors and open stairs.
New window screens must be supplied.
The dining room must papered be.
I miss my landlord very much.
These bills will all be sent to me.

Today I bought a can of paint
And things I've never bought before,
As brushes and a putty knife.
I'm going to paint the kitchen floor.
And I am going to try to build
A fence around our garden small.
Although it's nice to own a home,
I miss the landlord after all.

A Story of Cervantes.

Cervantes once gave a proof that his generosity was fully equal to his genius. In the early part of his life he was for some time a slave in Algiers; and there he devised a plan to free himself and thirteen of his fellow sufferers. One of them traitorously revealed the design, and they were all taken before the dey of Algiers, who promised them their lives on condition that they revealed the contriver of the plot.

"I was that person," at once cried Cervantes. "Save my companions and let me perish alone."

The dey, struck by his intrepidity, spared his life, allowed him to be ransomed and permitted him to go home.

What Eskimos Think of White Men.

The Eskimos' opinion of white men is sometimes as uncomplimentary as the white men's opinion of them. Vilhjalmr Stefansson, who was the ethnologist in company with the recent Anglo-American polar expedition, writes in Harper's Magazine of his experiences in the arctic while living with Eskimo families, and he reports with Eskimo as saying that white men are as bad to travel with as babies. Indeed, they go further and say that white men are worse than babies, because though babies cry they don't argue, and white men are always "giving directions about things they don't understand."

BY MRS. A. T. ASHMORE.

TAFFETA silk is in fashion once again, as might have been expected with the revival of the old time style of gown with flounces and ruchings, and there is more than a hint of the days of the civil war in the taffeta silk gowns now exhibited as the very latest models. There are so many different grades in taffeta silk that the selection is not an easy task. This season the softer qualities and those with a dull lustre (curious anomaly!) are the smartest. Changeable effects, even when all one color, are considered to be the best, and yet among the plain there are colorings so exquisitely soft and becoming that surely nothing else could be selected, and the wide range of colors that is provided to choose from permits—in fact, demands—that what is becoming must decide the question.

"A gray taffeta silk gown with black lace flounces and black velvet ribbon"—at once is brought to the remembrance the portraits of fifty years ago—the gentlewoman in her flounced taffeta, with the flounces of rare thread lace or taffeta and the bands of black velvet ribbon heading each flounce and outlining the bertha or fichu. To-day's rendering of the same style is much the same. The skirt is narrower, the flounces not so full, but that the same model served as inspiration cannot be questioned.

Old Fashioned Colors Revived.

Gray, peach color, corn color, ashes of roses, all old fashioned colors, are in style, and the Chantilly laces that were used for trimming in the days gone by are once again in high favor. But the dressmaking of to-day is a far more subtle art, and more attention is paid to the individual, so that if a too full skirt is hopelessly unbecoming the width is most cleverly manipulated and different lines are secured by some marvellous manipulation of the material. If the band of velvet heading each flounce makes too broad an effect, then bows or rosettes of velvet are added to break the line. The lace of the flounces is most carefully adjusted, made neither too scant nor too full, and such a transformation as can be and is wrought by these touches of a skilled hand it is almost impossible to realize.

A simple dinner gown, also possible for theatre and restaurant, is a quaint model made up in dark pink taffeta. Rows of puffs or wide shirred bands trim the lower part of the skirt, while the upper part and the body of the waist is of fold after fold of the silk drawn tight around the figure. Around the square cut neck is the softening of a flat band of guipure lace, while there can be, if desired, bands of the same lace in place of the shirred bands or just above the puffs, but there is no other trimming on the gown. "Quaint" "picturesque," "old-fashioned" are some of the adjectives applied to this model, which is certainly radically different from any of last season's designs. Taffeta silk evening gowns are evidently to be popular this summer, for another model that has met with favor is a pale blue one with flat bands of guipure lace edged with narrow Valenciennes ruching. The skirt is full and wide, gathered into the belt; the waist is pointed back and front, fits tight to the figure, and the trimming consists of a fichu of the silk trimmed with the ruching of Valenciennes to match the skirt. A white taffeta on the same model, with bands of shirred chiffon and clusters of tiny pink roses, is also becoming and effective.

Crêpe de Chine and crêpon are two materials that for a short time have been relegated to the background. Crêpon, indeed, has not been fashionable for a long time, and, as yet, cannot be counted as among popular fabrics, but it is to be noticed in many of the very latest model gowns. Crêpe de Chine never entirely retires from the field of popular approval, for it has more to recommend it than almost any fabric that is known. For summer the lighter weights are delightfully comfortable, even in the hottest weather; it cleans and even launders satisfactorily, and, while delightfully soft and supple, it still has enough firmness to enable it to be made into skirt and coat costumes, as well as the Empire gown. There are in crêpe de Chine many different weaves and textures, every color of the rainbow and many not associated with it, and there is a dull and a bright finish, so surely any woman can find what she likes. The satin finish crêpe de Chine is difficult to distinguish at first glance from the Liberty satin—that is in some of the qualities—but it is the fashion to combine the two, and then the points of contrast are easily discernible. Most practical for summer is the nattier blue crêpe de Chine or silk crêpon, made simply and trimmed either with lace the same color or with satin the same shade. The popular model for this style of gown is extremely simple, but so smart as to make it noticeable in a group of more elaborate and complicated costumes. The skirt is quite unlike any of the models yet exhibited, narrow, but not aggressively scant, with only a bias fold at the hem; the waist is loose, on the blouse order, and yet does not conceal any good lines of the figure, but it is very plain and very simple. It can be made in any color and will look well, while it can be elaborated upon if so desired by the addition of embroidered or lace bands.

It is extremely difficult as the season advances to dictate authoritatively as to what shall or shall not be worn. Not only customers but dressmakers and designers are apparently groping in the dark trying to find some one fashion that can be pronounced the one and only. The leading dressmakers and tailors speak firmly about the return of the full skirt and take orders galore for the narrowest skirt that can be made. The waist line must be normal, and, again, gowns galore are turned out with the waist line inches higher than was ever known in normal anatomy. Heavily trimmed skirts are obligatory and broken lines a feature of the very latest designs, so will say an authority on dress who in the same breath counsels the purchase of a most costly evening gown whose great beauty lies in the unbroken lines that define to perfection every line of the figure. Most generally unbecoming are a majority of the present day styles, so perhaps it is the instinct of the true artist designer warring with her sense of allegiance to Dame Fashion that makes it all so complicated a problem.

Length of New Gowns.

A disagreeable feature of the newest gowns is the length; an all round skirt, as it is called, must more than touch the ground all around, and be a trifle longer at the back. High heeled slippers are positively essential with these skirts, and still more essential is the rehearsing of how to walk in them. The satin or silk lining of the skirt is so close that it has to be pulled down after the gown is put on to prevent any wrinkles or folds, for they would show through the double or triple thickness of any of the transparent materials or even under a foulard or satin. The lining does not reach to the ground, but is finished with scant ruffles of mousseline de soie or heavy chiffon. It is not fashionable to have a drop skirt for a serge or cloth costume and even the separate silk skirt is considered unnecessary, but a compromise has been insisted upon and obtained by a lining of satin or soft finish silk made in with the material. This gives a softness and finish that is far more satisfactory than if the rough fabric is unlined, and at the same time takes far less room than even the most of scant separate skirts.

Practical Details for Home Dressmaking.

FINISHING the skirt with a band or fold of silk or satin is very fashionable this summer and the style has much that is practical about it. Often a pattern robe, and there are good bargains in the pattern-robes, of cloth, linen, lace or chiffon is too short in front and at the sides to give what is demanded of this season's skirts, that they shall not only touch the ground all the way, but lie on the ground. It is a most extravagant style, but none the less is it followed, so that the fold or band at the edge of the lace on a thin fabric is of great service, as it prevents the gown wearing out too quickly.

All white is not at the moment so fashionable as the contrast of colors, and the thin white gowns are finished with a fold or band of pink, blue or yellow satin, unless one of the figured broché design is preferred, and these broché or cashmere colorings are so attractive as to be immensely popular. The belt and any trimming on the waist matches the finish of the skirt, unless for practical reasons it is decided to finish the skirt with a band of white; then the belt can be of any color or design, and so many different effects can be gained by wearing the different belts that one gown does duty for two or three.

Separate waists are fast becoming as necessary to comfort as the lingerie shirt waists that fashion has at last succeeded in relegating to the background.

MEETING WAS HELD UNDER THE MOST PLEASANT AUSPICES

Annual Assembly of West Peterborough Farmers' Intsitute at Mr. J. H. Garbutt's Farm, Smith Township--Spirited and Healthy Discussion of Institute Affairs--Tea Served by the Ladies.

Friday was an ideal day for a picnic, and the home of Mr. J. H. Garbutt, Smith, is an ideal place.

The annual meeting of the West Peterborough Farmers' Institute was not a picnic in the strict meaning of the word, but as it was celebrated Friday it had more of the picnic spirit about it than it had on any other occasion.

It was more a matter of pleasure than of business, if business is to be looked at as laborious, and a question of necessity rather than of inclination. For the meeting was held under the most pleasing auspices. The scene of the meeting was on Mr. Garbutt's large lawn, which has a delightful outer setting of maples and the breeze most refreshingly tempered the June heat.

It's true it wasn't all sunshine, for after the meeting had been in session an hour or so the rain commenced to fall. At first it fell only tantalizingly, but later it came down in real showers, and the assembly had to seek shelter.

The members of the Ladies' Institute went into the house, while the meeting proper adjourned to the barn with the minute books, chairs and tables, but the sun was soon smiling pleasantly again after his little practical joke, and kept on his good behavior for the balance of the afternoon.

The holding of the meeting in the open air was a departure on the part of the Institute, and one that was very welcome to everyone concerned. The air was much easier to breathe and more invigorating that it would have been in a stuffy hall, and perhaps this stimulation of the pure air and gentle breeze was what caused the officers to take a livlier interest in the proceedings than is usually the case. All the topics were listened to with interest and suggestions were offered with a readiness that showed a real interest.

At the conclusion of the business session the gathering, which numbered over one hundred, about half the number composed of ladies, were photographed in a group by Mr. Nixon, of the Farm and Dairy editorial staff.

After this Mr. H. C. Duff gave a practical demonstration of surveying for farm underdrainage, and his exposition of this work proved one of the most interesting and valuable features of the meeting.

There was a prompt response en masse to the call for supper, and a delightful and thoroughly relished spread was provided by the Women's Institute and tastily served to the gathering, all the appetites being sharpened to a degree that kept the ladies busy catering to the requirements of their guests.

AN APPRECIATION OF MR. DUFF

The meeting opened on good time with Mr. J. H. Garbutt, the president, in the chair, and Mr. William Collins, the energetic secretary, acting in his official capacity.

Mr. Garbutt said it had been suggested by the board to hold the annual meeting at some farm, and for that reason he had placed his farm at the disposal of the committee.

He was sure that Mr. Duff's treatment of the drainage subject would be one of immense benefit.

In presenting his verbal annual report, as president of the society, Mr. Garbutt spoke highly of the offices of Mr. Duff in connection with the short courses and Farmers' Clubs, both of which had been excellently attended and fruitful in good results.

The annual reports which will be found below were then presented by the secretary and adopted without amendment.

No suggestions were offered as to the holding of supplementary meetings in new sections.

SOME GOOD SUGGESTIONS.

Mr. J. Arthur Vance, president of the East Durham Farmers' Institute, was called upon by the president to speak.

Mr. Vance said he was there to give, if possible, some new ideas on Institute work.

The speaker said that the East Durham Institute found it a very successful plan to have three delegates from each section to name at the annual meeting of the Institute the places of supplementary meetings, and also to tell what subjects would be most desirable for the different places of meeting. This greatly facilitated the work. If the meetings in any sections were not well enough attended to make them worth the trouble of, the Institute, it was the Institute's best plan to cut any such places of meeting out of the supplementary calendar.

If the directors didn't show sufficient interest in the Institute it was advisable to drop them from the board rather than to perennially retain them when they were not of service.

The president, in Mr. Vance's opinion, should be remunerated for his work. His time was too valuable to be given for nothing, and to vote him an honarium showed that he was appreciated, and would give him encouragement to work in the interests of the Institute. In East Durham the president was paid three dollars a day during his activities on the organization's behalf, and thought that the president for West Peterborough should be similiarly recognized.

THE OFFICERS AND DIRECTORS.

Then the election of officers was the order of business Mr. Garbutt said that there were others who might occupy the chair to better advantage than he, and suggested the appointment of a new president. The work of the office had been a liberal education to him, and it would be to any one else.

The following officers and directors were chosen:—

President—J. H. Garbutt.
Vice-President—T. D. Young.
Sec'y-Treas.—William Collins.
Directors—Smith: J. N. Telford, G. W. Mann, T. T. Milburn, Alex. McGregor, Fred McKee, B. W. Manning, T. J. Cullen, H. C. Garbutt and C. E. Moore.
Harvey: Robt. Shaw, A. Wilson and H. Coons.
Ennismore: J. K. Galvin, John Flood and Daniel Crough.
North Monaghan: John Brown and T. M. Hunter.
Otonabee: R. Handridge, S. Deyell, S. Matchett, Robert Chambers and W. B. Stewart.
Peterborough: C. C. Nixon, E. M. Elliott, R. H. Leary and J. E. A. Fitzgerald.
Auditors for the year—John Riddle and Joseph Barnard.

SUGGESTIONS TO IMPROVE INSTITUTE.

Mr. Duff was requested by the president to speak on this subject.

The speaker recognized that the membership wasn't what it should be. The suggestion that three men from each place of meeting be responsible for the success of the meetings, met with the approval of Mr. Duff. He also realized the need of the present members getting new ones.

Mr. Nixon made a motion that the president be allowed $3 a day remuneration for the time he spent in the Institute's work. This was seconded by Mr. Telford and carried.

Mr. Garbutt expressed his gratitude, but didn't think the society was in a flourishing enough condition to pay the money suggested, and for that reason didn't care to accept the compensation for the present.

GET THE YOUNG FELLOWS

In giving his ideas as to how to improve the Institute, Mr. Nixon said the members should do all they could to boost it, and to make it attractive for young fellows. Good meetings and good speakers were essential for the growth of the Institute.

CO-OPERATIVE POULTRY CIRCLES

Mr. H. C. Duff was very pleased to note the representative attendance of both sections of the Institute.

He spoke highly of the success of the Women's Institutes, and said their success quite overshadowed that attained by the Farmers' Institutes.

A number of the ladies had wanted to hear Mr. Duff speak on the poultry question.

Eggs, he said, as well as most of the farm produce, had been handled in the wrong way. The woman who took extra care in the handling of eggs should be rewarded for that care, whereas she was only paid the same as the careless handler.

In the Montreal warehouses 17 per cent. of the eggs were thrown out.

Nine, ten and eleven cents were paid per pound for old hens, and these were sold by them for thirteen and fourteen cents. There was no reason why the co-operative circles couldn't sell them direct to the warehouse for the higher price.

All eggs sold through the egg circles would be numbered, and when a customer cut the end off the egg at the breakfast table he would see the number and could feel assured that he wasn't cutting the head off a chicken.

Broilers, too, were being sold at too low a price. They were only bringing the original seller seventy-five cents a pair, and if sold through the agency of the co-operative circles they should bring from $1.25 to $1.75 a pair. A systematic way of selling the broilers would establish a regular market, and higher prices would be realized.

The buyers for the local circles were Gunn and Langlois, of Montreal, one of the largest firms in the Dominion. Of course the members of the circles were not necessarily bound to sell to this firm if better satisfaction could be obtained by dealing with any others.

Mr. Simpson Rennie addressed the meeting briefly and spoke heartily in support of the work being accomplished by the Institute.

THE REPORTS.

The following reports were presented:—

To the Members of the West Peterborough Farmers' Institute:

Gentlemen,—On behalf of your Executive Committee, I beg leave to submit to your approval the 23rd annual report of this Institute.

Since our last annual meeting we have had a great many changes take place in our nation, Dominion and Province, but we must still be pleased to know that peace and plenty still prevail in our midst.

The past year has been a very bright one from the agriculturalists' standpoint [illegible] shortage in some lines of stock, especially beef cattle and hogs and we should be up and doing to help make up the shortage in those lines.

The usual farmers' excursion was run in 1909 to the Central Experimental Farm at Ottawa, on June 10, and was very successful.

Our regular meetings were held in December last at Ennismore, when we had addresses from Mr. W. C. Shearer, Bright; Miss S. Campbell, Brampton; H. C. Duff, B.S.A., Norwood; Rev. M. F. Fitzpatrick and H. B. Cowan, manager and editor of Farm and Dairy. On the following day we held another meeting in Lakefield with the same speakers (except Rev. M. F. Fitzpatrick.) Our meetings were held in the afternoons and evenings of both days. The Women's Institute held a meeting in the afternoon and a joint one with ours in the evening. The attendance at the latter place was smaller than usual, owing to the inclement weather. Splendid musical talent rendered very acceptable programmes on both evenings.

Supplementary meetings were held at the following places in January: Stewart's Hall, Otonabee; 4th line Smith, Temperance Hall; Peterborough, City Council Chambers, and North Monaghan Town Hall. At 4th line, it being Saturday, an evening meeting only was held; at Peterborough an afternoon meeting, and at North Monaghan an evening one, while the attendance was fairly good. The speakers were Messrs. J. Gardhouse, Highfield; H. C. Duff, C. C. Nixon and H. B. Cowan. Still there should be more interest taken by the farmers, who should all attend and become members of the Institute, so that they may not only get the benefits of the speakers' addresses and the discussions thereon, but for the sake of receiving all the reports and bulletins that are being sent out to the members, who are alone entitled to receive them. We are pleased to find that the district has so energetic a representative of the Department of Agriculture as Mr. H. C. Duff, B.S.A., of Norwood, who so successfully conducted the short course in judging here last winter, and which was so highly appreciated by all, and we hope he may be able to again this winter run one on similar lines for five days instead of three. Mr. Duff has also through the dint of hard work and energy, been successful in organizing several farmers' clubs in both West and East Peterborough, and those should be a strong factor in helping to educate the younger farmers, and we should stand shoulder to shoulder with each and every organization that can be started in the interest of agriculture.

We have again been notified by Superintendent Putnam, that any point at which the attendance at meeting was below twenty-five that no speakers will be sent to them unless they ask for a meeting by petition signed by at least twenty-five as a guarantee of good faith that they will try to secure an audience.

We cannot close without extending to the city council our thanks for the use of their council chamber for holding our meetings, and also to the local press for the splendid reports published by them of our meetings, showing that they are interested in the good work that is being carried on by the Farmers' Institute, and in conclusion we would again urge on every farmer the necessity of our organization.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

WM. COLLINS, Sec'y-Treas.
J. H. GARBUTT, President.

MILLBROOK ITEMS

Special to the Review.

Millbrook, June 21.—Mr. Sid Fitzgerald left on Monday, June 20th, for Niagara Falls, where he intends to spend a week visiting friends.

NARROW ESCAPE.

A fire which threatened one of the business blocks, was narrowly averted on Wednesday, 15th, by the prompt action of Mrs. Gillette, who sent in the alarm. The fire started in a stable adjoining the residence of Robt. Brown and was making rapid headway when discovered. The fire brigade responded promptly, but were somewhat hindered by the fact that the gangway leading into the fire hall was torn away while some repairs were being made, and were unable to get the engine out as a result. A hole was made through the floor and the water pumped up from the creek which flowed under one corner of the building. After an hour's strenuous work the fire was got under control. The fire was caused by children playing with matches.

Miss Stelle Hetherington is on the sick list these days. She is staying in Peterborough with her uncle, while undergoing treatment. Her friends all wish her a speedy recovery.

APSLEY

Special to the Review.

Apsley, June 20.—Messrs. J. E. Hunter and H. C. Graham, evangelists, who have been holding meetings here for the past week, left on Wednesday last for Lasswade, where they will carry on the work of God. During their stay amongst us they made over seventy converts, who became members of the different churches by accepting Jesus Christ as their Saviour and promising to live a Christian life. They proved themselves to be true preachers of the gospel by word and example, and formed many friendships during their stay in our village. On Thursday evening, their last evening in Apsley, an ice cream social was held in the "Templars' Hall" in their honor, gotten up by the ladies of the Methodist church. Doors were open at 7.30 and the program commenced at 7.45.

The first part of the program consisted of solos, duets, choruses by the choir, instrumental music and speeches by the clergy of the different denominations. The second part of the program was of a different nature. Magic lantern views of China were shown by the Christian gentlemen, accompanied by an explanation of the different pictures by Mr. Graham, which was much enjoyed by all. Mr. Graham is deeply interested in these views of the phase of Chinese life, as he leaves as a missionary for that country a year from next fall.

Refreshments were then served. At the close of the entertainment farewell addresses were given by both gentlemen thanking the people of Apsley and surrounding country for the kind way in which they had been treated and impressing upon the minds of those who had taken a stand for Jesus to live up to what they had promised to do, and advising those who had not done so to consider the matter seriously. They also stated that they could always look back with pleasant recollections of stay in Apsley, having won a glorious campaign.

The Presbyterian and Anglican churches made replies in behalf of the people of Apsley. "Blest be the tie that binds" was sung, and the gathering was dismissed by singing the National Anthem.

COMMISSIONER EVANS REPORTS ON THE PROTECTION OF GAME

He Recommends That a Commission be Appointed to Take Charge of the Entire Game Department—Most of the Illegal Shooting is Done by Well-Known Individuals.

Toronto, June 23.—"Your commissioner would therefore strongly urge the advisability of placing the department of game and fisheries under the control of a small, working commission, somewhat after the model of the Temiskaming & Northern Ontario Railway Commission, and while this interim report will be found to contain recommendations for an increased expenditure of public moneys by the Department . . . your commissioner would not recommend these expenditures or improvements unless his recommendation of placing the Department of Game and Fisheries under a commission is acted upon by your Government, for the reason that the present system has not produced the most efficient subordinate officers."

This is the principal recommendation contained in the interim report of A. Kelly Evans, who was appointed commissioner last July to enquire into the fish and game situation in Ontario, and which was prepared for the Legislature at the last session, but which was just made public yesterday. A final report is to follow.

He adds that most of the harm done to fish, game and fur-bearing animals in the province is confined to a small number of persons, well-known in the districts where they operate.

"These persons often terrorize the community to such an extent that information as to their depredations is difficult to obtain. . . . That open threats have been made, and are being made in regard to what they will do if any attempt is made to interfere with their actions, is well known." Instances are cited where summer residences have been burned because they were situated at a point inconvenient to the operations of law-breakers, or their owners had given information to the Government.

The following specific recommendations are made in connection with the outside service.

1. No officer of the outside service of the Department of Game and Fisheries be employed on a salary less than sufficient to maintain himself upon it.

2. No officer, employed by the Department of Game and Fisheries on its outside service, be allowed to carry on other work, or engage in any other commercial or business enterprise while so employed, except in cases where such officer is in the employ of, and paid by, some corporation or association, and only commissioned by the Government.

3. The commissions of all officers of the outside service of the Department of Game and Fisheries who are receiving less than $500 per annum, or a pro rata amount for temporary services, be cancelled as rapidly as it is possible to reorganize the outside service, in accordance with the principle of fewer and better paid officials.

4. No officer be in future engaged or employed by the Department of Game and Fisheries on its outside service who cannot furnish satisfactory proof of such knowledge and experience, and be of such physique and good character, as to render him likely to prove of value to the particular branch of the service into which he is placed.

5. The number of persons authorized to sell non-resident anglers' licenses or hunting permits be increased sufficiently to ensure these licenses and permits being very easily procurable.

THE TRAINMEN REFUSE TO ACCEPT THE AWARD

Committee of Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen State in Message to the Minister of Labor at Ottawa That Differentials and Standards Have Been Ignored by Conciliation Board.

Montreal, June 23.—The committee of the Brotherhoods of Railway Trainmen and Railway Conductors have refused to accept the award of the board of conciliation in regard to the wage dispute with the Canadian Pacific and Grand Trunk Railways.

Their decision was made known yesterday afternoon, when they sent the following telegram to the Minister of Labor at Ottawa:

"The general committee, representing the men employed in the train and yard service on the C.P.R. unanimously request us to advise you that they have received and thoroughly considered the award handed out by the board of arbitration in the recent investigation.

"While thanking the board for its earnest efforts, honest consideration and intent in preparing the award referred to, the committee are compelled to advise you that it is unsatisfactory, being impracticable of adoption, and that it cannot be accepted.

"For reasons best known to the gentlemen composing the board, standards and comparative differentials existing in the territory and on the C.P.R. have been entirely ignored, or, worse still, reversed, thereby making the award as handed down impossible of acceptance.

"We are this date writing Mr. McNichol, quoting this telegram, and asking if his company are still indisposed to recognize past and recently revised standards in the territory."

This is signed by James Murdock, vice-president of the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen, and S. H. Berry, vice-president of the Order of Railway Conductors.

The committee expects an answer from Mr. McNicholl to-day.

The standards referred to in the telegram to the Minister of Labor are those paid by United States railways entering Canada, so that practically the demand of the men is that wages on Canadian railways be placed on the Canadian border, that is upon the New York Central and its affiliated lines, which are closely in touch with the Canadian frontier.

ATTEMPT AT SARI-KARI

New York, June 23.—In a secluded spot near the Botanical Gardens in Bronx Park yesterday a young, well-dressed Japanese made what is likely to be a successful attempt to commit sari-kari. He was taken to Fordham Hospital, where, as he was placed on the operating table, he tried to tell the doctors something and was heard to mutter that the "Japanese Government had sent spies here to catch him and take him back home."

It was said at the hospital that the penknife wounds which the young oriental had inflicted upon himself would probably prove fatal.

AIRLOCK FOR SUBMARINES

London, June 23.—Following the disaster to the French submarine Pluviose, the Admiralty has adopted a device known as an "airlock," which is to be fitted to all new submarines in the British navy.

The "airlock" consists simply of air sections built from the side of the submarine in which air is trapped as water fills the interior of the ship. In event of a mishap the crew would immediately make for the airtraps, and having adjusted life-saving jackets and helmets, would be ready to make their escape from the torpedo hatch.

Hon. A. J. McLean Elected.

Lethbridge, Alta., June 23.—A. J. McLean, Provincial Secretary, was re-elected by acclamation yesterday. His nomination papers were signed by prominent citizens all over the country.

ANNOUNCES ANTI-TYPHOID SERUM

Paris, June 23.—Prof. Vincent announced last night before the Academy of Medicine the discovery of an effective anti-typhoid vaccine, which he prepared by steeping typhoid bacilli in a weak solutoin of water and sodium chloride (common salt), with [illegible] of ether.

Prof. Vincent made a number of experiments with animals, which, after being vaccinated, withstood subsequent inoculation with typhoid germs. He also vaccinated thirteen persons, an examination of whose blood after the operation showed that it possessed to a high degree properties destructive to the typhoid bacillus. Further experiments demonstrated the fact that the typhoid bacilli, when placed in contact with the serum of the blood taken from the person vaccinated, lost all vitality.

COUNSEL MUST BE ON THE JOB

Ottawa, June 23.—Sir John Boyd yesterday morning gave a lecture to counsel who were not ready with their cases when the high court opened. The first case called brought no respose, and it was struck off the list. Another case was called, but counsel for the plaintiff was not on hand. He entered a minute later and was told by the court that he was fortunate that the case was not struck off the list with costs. The counsel for the first case called entered shortly after with apologies, and the Chancellor decided that his case would be called again.

FREE AND WEALTHY

Kingston, June 23.—Allan S. Leys of London, whose release from the penitentiary was ordered by the Court of Appeal, on the ground that his conviction for stealing a diamond ring from his sister in 1908 was illegal. Leys was found insane at the time of the trial and placed in an asylum some months afterwards. He is now at liberty.

His mother died in July, 1908, leaving an estate of $120,000. Allan was left nothing, the estate going to two daughters and one son.

A. B. Cunningham of Kingston, through whose efforts Leys was released, has found that the estate left by his mother to her uncle, whose will stated that all children must share it. Thus Allan Leys is entitled to a quarter. Leys is not only a free man, but heir to $30,000.

LARGEST SHIP IN THE WORLD

Hamburg, June 23.—Arriving here from Potsdam yesterday, Emperor William lunched with Albert Ballin, director-general of the Hamburg-American steamship line, and Marine Constructor Mews, who explained to the Emperor the plans of the new steamer which the company has decided to build immediately. This will be the largest steamship in the world, having a length between perpendiculars of 876 feet and a breadth of 85 1-2 feet. From keel to upper deck she will measure 64 feet. She will have a speed of 22 knots, and will be twice the tonnage of the Kaiserin Auguste Victoria. The Emperor presented to Herr Ballin a bronze bust of himself.

THE CAPTAIN WAS DRUNK

Victoria, B.C., June 23.—A despatch from Prince Rupert says the Victoria sealing schooner Eva Marie, bound to Behring Sea, struck near Green Island Tuesday night, soon after leaving Prince Rupert and was abandoned. The sealers, thirty [illegible] mostly Indians, escaped in two boats and ten canoes carried by the vessel. The weather was fair and there was little wind. The wreck was reported due to the captain being drunk.

Heat Jumps Strawberries.

St. Catharines, June 23.—This present heat wave is going to be a boon in one way for the general public. All over the Niagara peninsula hundreds of tons of strawberries are ripening up with such a jump that the markets will never be able to hold them, and prices will probably go lower than ever they were before. "All the berries are coming in at once," said Jas. Titterington of Titterington Bros., yesterday.

MORE LOCAL OPTION CONTESTS

Welland, June 23.—The citizens of Willoughby Township have decided to vote on local option next January. Port Colborne has also decided to vote on local option next January. This makes eight municipalities in the County of Welland, out of thirteen, that have already organized and determined to vote, and organization is being perfected in the other municipalities.

TERRIBLE ACCIDENT OCCURS ON CONEY ISLAND SWITCHBACK

While Travelling at Terrific Speed on Scenic Railway at Famous Summer Park Two Cars Crowded With Merry-Makers Jump the Track.

New York, June 23.—At least four persons were fatally injured and a dozen others seriously hurt early yesterday, when two crowded cars of a scenic railway on the Bowery at Coney Island, running at terrific speed, jumped the track and dropped with a mighty crush a sheer 60 feet to the ground.

The accident occurred as the crowds of people who remained as the resort to enjoy the cool of the early morning hours were making merry at the various amusement places. Two cars of the big switchback were quickly filled, when they were hauled up the incline and the party, laughing and shouting, plunged down the first steep grade. Up the next incline the cars shot to the high level of the scenic road and began the drive down at a mile a minute pace.

Something went wrong with the mechanism, and as the cars were dashing around the first turn the rear car jumped the track, dragging the forward one with it. Ten of the occupants were hurled from the cars and went crashing down amongst the scenery, falling to the ground, where they lay unconscious in a huddle. Six went down with the first car. They were pinned fast beneath the wreckage.

These last were the ones most seriously injured. The lives of all the half dozen were despaired of to-day at the hospital to which they were taken.

Indescribable confusion prevailed as the cars took their frightful plunge. Spectators of the disaster screamed in terror, and the panic was increased when some one switched off the electric lights. The police had hard work quelling the panic. The six persons who had gone down with the falling car were found pinned under the wreckage.

The man in charge of the diving cars escaped injury. He could not explain the accident, but declared that it was unavoidable.

Another Similar Fatality.

Buffalo, June 23.—Louise Koch, 17 years old, a junior of Masten Park High School, was fatally injured yesterday on a scenic railway at Crystal Beach, Ont., where the school picnic was held. A steamer was started for Buffalo on a record-breaking run to save the girl's life, but she died just as the boat reached the dock.

Miss Koch's father, who had not heard of the accident, but who was expecting his daughter on the evening boat, was at the dock when her body was brought ashore.

PRESIDENT TAFT IS VICTORIOUS

U.S. Senate Concurred in Postal Savings Bank Bill.

Washington, June 23.—After voting down several amendments, the United States Senate yesterday decided by 4 to 25, to concur in the House amendments to the postal savings bank bill, and thus took the last legislative step necessary to establishment of a postal savings bank system in the United States. The measure was included in the administration schedule and its passage marks another triumph for President Taft.

The bill, as it goes to the President, provides for the designation of post-offices as postal savings depositeries. The opening of such depositories is left to the discretion of a board of three trustees, the Postmaster-General, the Secretary of the Treasury and the Attorney-General. This board is given complete control of the depositories [illegible] funds.

The postal savings funds thus accumulated are to be placed in state and national banks in communities in which the deposits are made, and the banks are to be required to pay 2 1-4 per cent. interest. Five per cent. of the total deposits is to be held by the treasurer of the United States as a reserve to guarantee the payment of depositors.

Banks must deposit security in the shape of public bonds to insure the safety of deposits. There is a provision authorizing the withdrawal of 30 per cent. of the deposits for investment in Government bonds, and depositors are permitted to transmit their deposits into bonds when they so desire.

There also is a special provision authorizing the investment in bonds of the remaining 65 per cent. of the savings funds but this step is to be taken only when directed by the President in the interest of the general welfare.

THE MAN OF YESTERDAY

The man who yesterday went to Magistrate Dumble and asked to be placed on the Indian list, as he could not, in his own strength, keep sober, was stronger than be thought. That man was to be admired for his nerve, and the chances seem good that he will yet win out in the struggle. The men who die drunkards are usually recruited from the ranks of those who think they can easily quit any day, wake up to find that their one-time solace and inspiration was only fooling them, and that it was gradually, taking away their power of resistance. Sometimes they win, once in a while they lose, and we read of the suicide, the accidental death, and see the fatherless child.

But the man who drinks, who is a man at all, will never ask the person to join him when he knows that there is the battle on. And the bartender will not either, for the barkeep does not like the drunken man. He prefers the customer who drinks his glass and goes about his business.

"When fierce temptation, seconded within by traitor appetite, invade the human breast, to combat may be glorious and success may crown us, but to fly is safe."

There are many, perhaps, in Peterborough, who feel like this chap who called on the magistrate, but who lack the nerve.

THE OGLER

Two Lindsay girls who were annoyed by ogling humanity in man form in Lindsay, wrote to the "Warder" complaining of the treatment. They say it is a great shame that respectable girls cannot walk the streets without listening to comments from a class of disrespectful men. It is. There always was the smart Alec, no matter how obscure the village, and as the population increases, so do these fresh fellows. But there is also the girl with the saucy eye, the winking eye and coaxing manner. She says never a word, yet her eyes speak for her. Can you blame the young men, the middle-aged and old men, if they notice when she passes. She dresses to attract attention, and people usually get what they are looking for.

THE LAW SATISFIED

Henderson is gone. The law has been satisfied, for the lad is dead. He has gone to a Judge who knows both sides of the story. The infallible Man, who 1900 years ago walked this earth, said that this life was a matter of thought, as much as deed. Were all the men and women hung who have thought murder at one time or another in their career this country of ours would be strangely depopulated. We clothe ourselves with an air of superiority and shudder at murder. We are sane. We would not kill. We are fairly evenly balanced, and have had no very strong temptations. Others are weak minded and tempted beyond their power of resistence.

But Henderson has murdered, was caught, is hung, is buried and will soon be forgotten, and the world wags on, without more than a passing thought of the man whose neck was broken at the end of a rope.

UNIVERSITY EDUCATION

In answer to an article in the editorial page of the Review on the insufficiency of university education as it is to-day, the Toronto Star admits that there are men taking wrong courses and that their time could be more profitably spent if they followed some business for which nature better fitted them. We repeat education is a good thing as far as giving the doctor, lawyer, civil engineer and such men the indispensible start, but it is safe to say that a man can have much of the individuality educated out of him. Instead of becoming observing he knows it principally by the book. The book thinks for him, sees for him. Lose the book and the man is gone.

Many men would be better if they had never seen the walls of a university. The day is coming when the system of education now in vogue will be greatly changed and men and women will only take up that which they will find profitable in after life. The extra baggage of book lore will be left out.

The Star says:—It must be admitted that there are men taking wrong courses in the university, and men spending time which would be more profitably spent in some of the ways indicated by the Review. There is, however, no infallible guide for the choosing of an occupation. All that can be done by any system of education is to offer to everyone the opportunity for the maximum development of all his faculties. It is better that some time should be wasted in a futile effort at higher education, than that any should suffer through the lack of opportunity.

The evil to which the Review refers ought to be minimized by recent movements in higher education, extending its benefits to those who are to be engaged in commerce agriculture and manufacturing industry. Some of the foolish contempt in which farming was once held was due to a notion that it was a field for unskilled labor only. Agricultural colleges and experimental farms are raising it to its due rank as a profession. And apart from the actual knowledge gained in a college course in agriculture, there is benefit in the agricultural student rubbing shoulders with the student of law and medicine. Not the least of the advantages of a university course is the broadening and inspiring influence of the mingling of three thousand young men and women engaged in the approach to truth through a dozen different avenues. At present this advantage is not fully used, but we feel sure that as time goes on it will be more and more realized.

The best school of the world is the university of the world and the very best preparation for stepping into the world is a minature world within the walls of the college. The simple education of the business college with its actual business and imitation money, puts many a man and woman into an immediate position where they may make themselves valuable and rise.

Charles M. Reynolds, Chicago, head of the $200,000,000 Continental and Commercial Bank, of the United States, commenced as a messenger boy, and never went to college. Hill and the Rockwood academy, Hill and a host of others, would university education as it was, and is, have helped them or would it perhaps have given them a dislike to arduous toil where the coat is taken off and the hands blistered?

THE UNIVERSITY SHOULD TRY AND BRING THE REAL AND IDEAL AS CLOSE TOGETHER AS POSSIBLE.

What special advantage does a commercial traveller gain through three or four years spent in the university?

THE RED DAB OF DEATH.

"See that big blob of scarlet paint?" said the engineer as he pointed to a girder high up in the skeleton of the new skyscraper. "That red spot means that one of the men working on the building was killed by the girder sweeping him off the structure while being put in position."

The visitor craned his neck and saw a rough patch of vermilion paint on one of the floor girders up on the sixteenth story. "It must be a dangerous life," he said to his engineering friend.

"Yes. Those men up there are working under the chance of instant death at any moment. They'll walk along the topmost girder, 300 feet above the sidewalk—a little path of slippery iron five inches wide—and will lean outward against the wind. You or I couldn't do it for a second.

"Now and again there's an accident. A chap slips. A worker gets hit by a swinging girder and flung off. Another man takes an incautious step and falls off into eternity. The men working near by do their best to get at him if he manages to grab the girder he's falling from, and there are some swift and reckless races with death to get to their comrade at any cost in the five or ten seconds allowed them while strong fingers are sliding away from a slippery beam flange. If the worst happens and the man falls in spite of their efforts, then they apply the dab of red paint, and the ironworkers call it a day. They don't speak much of the man that is gone, as a rule. He's soon forgotten. The men consider it fate.

"You'd think, by the way," went on the engineer, "that the higher up these men worked the more careful they'd become. They aren't particularly careful, but they do guard against the hypnotism of height. One of the men working on a high girder gets paralyzed now and again by a sudden fear that holds him motionless and still on his iron beam.

"The men look out for this sort of thing, and the remedy is to distract his attention by a rough blow on the back or in some cases by exciting him to anger through any means in their power. When the man gets fighting mad he is freed from the paralysis of terror or whatever you may choose to call it. He gets up from his girder to make a rush for the other fellow to do him up, and the moment he is safe he is restrained by the other men.

"Whenever you see a skyscraper framework," concluded the engineer, "each dab of scarlet paint on the iron means that some man has come to his death. Every skyscraper and every bridge is the monument to some little group of unknown workers, laboring at dizzy heights and dallying with sudden death as part of their day's work."—New York Press.

A Poverty Stricken Queen.

Partly owing to the fact that she was wedded to an avaricious king and partly because she was generous with the little money allowed her Elizabeth of York, queen of Henry VII., spent but a small amount for dress. She was very often in debt, and the sums she spent were ridiculously small, 20 shillings ($5) being the greatest amount expended at any one time. Her gowns were mended and turned, and new waists were made for them, as is shown by the record of bills paid to her tailor. These bills prove that she wore her clothes for a long time, for her gowns were obliged to be newly hemmed, and also that, though a princess of the great house of Plantagenet, she wore shoes costing but 24 cents, which were decorated with tin buckles!

Made It Clear.

A senator, speaking of the advantages of clearness of statement, told a story about a restaurant to illustrate his meaning. He said:

"This restaurant advertised a dinner, but not in the loose way many other restaurants advertise dinner as between certain hours, whether there would be enough dinner to last between those hours or not. No. The man who runs that restaurant has a proper knowledge of his responsibilities and of the exact use of the language. He advertised, 'Chicken pie, 25 cents: from 12:30 until gone.'"

CATTLE MARKETS.

Cattle Generally Lower and Dull—Hogs Slightly Lower.

Montreal Live Stock.

MONTREAL, June 22.—(Special.)—At the Canadian Pacific live stock market, the offerings of live stock this morning consisted of 800 cattle, 650 sheep and lambs, 660 hogs and 1000 calves. A weak feeling prevails in the market for cattle, and prices show a further decline of ¼c to ½c per lb. from Monday. This was due to the increased offerings, the poor quality of the stock and the continued warm weather.

There was a large gathering of buyers, but the demand was limited, and only for small lots. In consequence, the trade on the whole was slow, and some were left over.

A few choice steers sold at 6¾c; good at 6¼c to 6½c; fairly good at 5¾c to 6c; fair at 5¼c to 5½c, and common at 4½c to 5c per lb.

There were a large number of inferior cows on the market, which met with a slow sale at 3c to 4c, while the better grades brought as high as 5½c to 6c per pound.

The quality of the bulls was poor, and they sold at 3½c to 4¼c per lb.

The trade in sheep, lambs and calves was more active on account of the increased supply, but the tone of the market was weaker, and prices for sheep and lambs are lower, the former selling at 4½c per lb., and the latter at $3.50 to $5 each.

Calves were firm under a good demand, and sales were made at $3 to $10 each, as to size and quality.

A weaker feeling prevails in the market for hogs, owing to larger receipts, and prices were fully 25c per 100 lbs. lower than on Monday.

At this reduction the demand from packers was fairly good, and sales of mixed loads were made at $9 to $9.50 per 100 lbs., weighed off cars.

At the Montreal Stock Yards West End Market, there were 275 cattle, 400 sheep and lambs, 800 hogs and 850 calves. The trade at this market for cattle was also slow, and prices ruled lower. Hogs were easier at the sales of selected lots at $9.75 per 100 lbs., weighed off cars. The demand for sheep and lambs was good, and the prices realized were much the same as those quoted above.

Cumberland, Md., June 23.—The body of Alice Brown, aged 18, was found with the throat cut in a clump of bushes here yesterday morning. Buck Nolan, 18 years old, with blood-stained hands and clothes and the imprint of teeth on his arms, is in jail, charged with the murder, and Earl Mudge and Loring Barringer, both young men, are held as witnesses.

Blamed the Motorist.

Orangeville, June 23.—The inquest into the death of John Marshall, Melancton Township farmer who was killed near Shelbourne, was concluded Tuesday, when the jury returned a verdict blaming the driver of the automobile, Dr. Gowan, of Horning's Mills, for not sounding his horn.

The Mystery of The Yellow Room

By GASTON LEROUX

COPYRIGHT, 1908, By BRENTANO'S.

The young man asked us to follow him into the vestibule, and we did. He led us toward the lavatory and begged M. de Marquet to kneel beside him. This lavatory is lit by the glass door, and when the door was open the light which penetrated was sufficient to light it perfectly. M. de Marquet and M. Joseph Rouletabille knelt down on the threshold, and the young man pointed to a spot on the pavement.

"The stones of the lavatory have not been washed by Daddy Jacques for some time," he said. "That can be seen by the layer of dust that covers them. Now notice here the marks of two large footprints and the black ash they left where they have been. That ash is nothing else than the charcoal dust that covers the path along which you must pass through the forest in order to get directly from Epinay to the Glandier. You know there is a little village of charcoal burners at that place who make large quantities of charcoal. What the murderer did was to come here at midday, when there was nobody at the pavilion, and attempt his robbery."

"But what robbery? Where do you see any signs of robbery? What proves to you that a robbery has been committed?" we all cried at once.

"What put me on the trace of it," continued the journalist.

"Was this," interrupted M. de Marquet, still on his knees.

"Evidently," said Rouletabille.

And M. de Marquet explained that there were on the dust of the pavement marks of two footsteps as well as the impression, freshly made, of a heavy rectangular parcel, the marks of the cord with which it had been fastened being easily distinguished.

"You have been here, then, M. Rouletabille? I thought I had given orders to Daddy Jacques, who was left in charge of the pavilion, not to allow anybody to enter."

"Don't scold Daddy Jacques. I came here with M. Robert Darzac."

"When I saw the mark of the parcel by the side of the footprints I had no doubt as to the robbery," replied M. Rouletabille. "The thief had not brought a parcel with him. He had made one here—a parcel with the stolen objects no doubt—and he put it in this corner, intending to take it away when the moment came for him to make his escape. He had also placed his heavy boots beside the parcel, for, see, there are no marks of steps leading to the marks left by the boots, which were placed side by side. That accounts for the fact that the murderer left no trace of his steps when he fled from the yellow room, nor any in the laboratory, nor in the vestibule. After entering the yellow room in his boots he took them off, finding them troublesome or because he wished to make as little noise as possible. The marks made by him in going through the vestibule and the laboratory were subsequently washed out by Daddy Jacques. Having for some reason or other taken off his boots, the murderer carried them in his hand and placed them by the side of the parcel he had made. By that time the robbery had been accomplished. The man then returned to the yellow room and slipped under the bed, where the mark of his body is perfectly visible on the floor and even on the mat, which has been slightly moved from its place and creased. Fragments of straw also recently torn bear witness to the murderer's movements under the bed."

"Yes, yes. We know all about that," said M. de Marquet.

"The robber had another motive for returning to hide under the bed," continued the astonishing boy journalist. "You might think that he was trying to hide himself quickly on seeing, through the vestibule window, M. and Mlle. Stangerson about to enter the pavilion. It would have been much easier for him to have climbed up to the attic and hidden there, waiting for an opportunity to get away, if his purpose had been only flight. No, no! He had to be in the yellow room."

Here the chief intervened.

"That's not at all bad, young man. I compliment you. If we do not know yet how the murderer succeeded in getting away we can at any rate see how he came in and committed the robbery. But what did he steal?"

"Something very valuable," replied the young reporter.

At that moment we heard a cry from the laboratory. We rushed in and found M. Stangerson, his eyes haggard, his limbs trembling, pointing to a sort of bookcase which he had opened and which we saw was empty. At the same instant he sank into the large armchair that was placed before the desk and groaned, the tears rolling down his cheeks: "I have been robbed again! For God's sake, do not say a word of this to my daughter! She would be more pained than I am." He heaved a deep sigh and added, in a tone I shall never forget, "After all what does it matter—so long as she lives!"

"She will live," said M. Darzac in a voice strangely touching.

"And we will find the stolen articles," said M. Dax. "But what was in the cabinet?"

"Twenty years of my life," replied the illustrious professor sadly, "or rather, of our lives—the lives of myself and my daughter. Yes, our most precious documents, the records of our secret experiments and our labors of twenty years, were in that cabinet. It is an irreparable loss to us and, I venture to say, to science. All the processes by which I had been able to arrive at the precious proof of the destructibility of matter were there—all. The man who came wished to take all from me—my daughter and my work, my heart and my soul."

And the great scientist wept like a child.

Rouletabille entered into explanations for which there was no need as to why he had been led to believe that a robbery had been committed, which included the simultaneous discovery he had made in the lavatory and the empty precious cabinet in the laboratory.

The first thing that had struck him, he said, was the unusual form of that piece of furniture. It was very strongly built of fire proof iron, clearly showing that it was intended for the keeping of most valuable objects. Then he noticed that the key had been left in the lock. "One does not ordinarily have a safe and leave it open!" he had said to himself.

This little key, with its brass head and complicated wards, had strongly attracted him—its presence had suggested robbery.

"You will do well, M. de Marquet, to ask M. Stangerson who usually kept that key," said Rouletabille.

"My daughter," replied M. Stangerson. "She was never without it."

"Ah, then that changes the aspect of things which no longer corresponds with M. Rouletabille's ideas!" cried M. de Marquet. "If that key never left Mlle. Stangerson the murderer must have waited for her in her room for the purpose of stealing it, and the robbery could not have been committed until after the attack had been made on her. But after the attack four persons were in the laboratory! I can't make it out!"

"The robbery," said the reporter, "could only have been committed before the attack upon Mlle. Stangerson in her room. When the murderer entered the pavilion he already possessed the brass headed key."

"That is impossible," said M. Stangerson in a low voice.

"It is quite possible, monsieur, as this proves."

And the young man drew a copy of the Epoque from his pocket dated the 21st of October (I recall the fact that the crime was committed on the night between the 24th and 25th) and, showing us an advertisement, he read:

"'Yesterday a black satin reticule was lost in the Louvre department store. It contained, among other things, a small key with a brass head. A handsome reward will be given to the person who has found it. This person must write, poste restante, bureau 40, to this address: M. A. T. H. S. N.' Do not these letters suggest Mlle. Stangerson?" continued the reporter. "The key with a brass head, is not this the key? This advertisement interested me specially; the woman of the key surrounded it with a kind of mystery. Evidently she valued the key since she promised a big reward for its restoration. And I thought on these six letters: M. A. T. H. S. N. The first four at once pointed to a Christian name, evidently, I said, Math is Mathilde. But I could make nothing of the two last letters. So I threw the journal aside and occupied myself with other matters. Four days later when the evening paper appeared with enormous headline announcing the attack on Mlle. Stangerson the letters in the advertisement mechanically recurred to me. I had forgotten the two last letters, S. N. When I saw them again I could not help exclaiming, 'Stangerson!' I jumped into a cab and rushed into the bureau No. 40 asking, 'Have you a letter addressed to M. A. T. H. S. N.?' The clerk replied that he had not. I insisted, begged and entreated him to search. He wanted to know if I were playing a joke on him and then told me that he had had a letter with the initials M. A. T. H. S. N., but he had given it up three days ago to a lady who came for it. 'You come today to claim the letter, and the day before yesterday another gentleman claimed it. I've had enough of this,' he concluded angrily. I tried to question him as to the two persons who had already claimed the letter, but whether he wished to entrench himself behind professional secrecy—he may have thought that he had already said too much—or whether he was disgusted at the joke that had been played on him he would not answer any of my questions."

"Then it is almost certain," said M. Stangerson, "that my daughter did lose the key, and that she did not tell me of it, wishing to spare any anxiety, and that she begged whoever had found it to write to the poste restante. She evidently feared that, by giving our address, inquiries would have resulted that would have apprised me of the loss of the key. It was quite logical, quite natural, for her to have taken that course—for I have been robbed once before."

"Where was that, and when?" asked the police chief.

"Oh, many years ago, in America, in Philadelphia. There were stolen from my laboratory the drawings of two inventions that might have made the fortune of a man. Not only have I never learned who the thief was, but I have never heard even a word of the object of the robbery, doubtless because in order to defeat the plans of the person who had robbed me I myself brought these two inventions before the public and so rendered the robbery of no avail. From that time on I have been very careful to shut myself in when I am at work. The bars to these windows, the lonely situation of this pavilion, this cabinet, which I had specially constructed, this special lock, this unique key, all are precautions against fears inspired by a sad experience."

"Most interesting!" remarked M. Dax.

M. Rouletabille asked about the reticule. Neither M. Stangerson nor Daddy Jacques had seen it for several days, but a few hours later we learned from Mlle. Stangerson herself that the reticule had either been stolen from her or she had lost it. She further corroborated all that had passed just as her father had stated. She had gone to the poste restante and, on the 23rd of October, had received a letter which, she affirmed, contained nothing but a vulgar pleasantry, which she had immediately burned.

To return to our examination, or, rather, to our conversation. I must state that the chief of police, having inquired of M. Stangerson under what conditions his daughter had gone to Paris on the 20th of October, we learned that M. Robert Darzac had accompanied her, and Darzac had not been again seen at the chateau from that time until the day after the crime had been committed. The fact that M. Darzac was with her in the department store when the reticule disappeared could not pass unnoticed and, it must be said, strongly awakened our interest.

This conversation between magistrates, accused, victim, witnesses and journalist was coming to a close when quite a theatrical sensation—an incident of a kind displeasing to M. de Marquet—was produced. The officer of the gendarmes came to announce that Frederic Larsan requested to be admitted—a request that was at once complied with. He held in his hand a heavy pair of muddy boots, which he threw on the pavement of the laboratory, where they could be plainly seen by all present.

"Here," he said, "are the boots worn by the murderer. Do you recognize them, Daddy Jacques?" he said to the old man.

Daddy Jacques bent over them and, stupefied, recognized a pair of old boots which he had some time back thrown into a corner of his attic. He was so taken aback that he could not hide his agitation and could only stand and stare at the boots.

Then, pointing to the handkerchief in the old man's hand, Frederic Larsan said:

"That's a handkerchief astonishingly like the one that was found in the yellow room."

"I know," said Daddy Jacques, trembling, "they are almost alike."

"And then," continued Frederic Larsan, "the old Basque cap also found in the yellow room might at one time have been worn by Daddy Jacques himself. All this, gentlemen, proves, I think, that the murderer wished to disguise his real personality. He did it in a very clumsy way, or, at least, so it appears to us. Don't be alarmed, Daddy Jacques. We are quite sure that you were not the murderer. You never left the side of M. Stangerson. But if M. Stangerson had not been working that night and had gone back to the chateau after parting with his daughter, and Daddy Jacques had gone to sleep in his attic, no one would have doubted that he was the murderer. He owes his safety, therefore, to the tragedy having been enacted too soon—the murderer, no doubt, from the silence in the laboratory, imagined that it was empty and that the moment for action had come. The man who had been able to introduce himself here so mysteriously and to leave so many evidences against Daddy Jacques was, there can be no doubt, familiar with the house. At what hour exactly he entered, whether in the afternoon or in the evening, I cannot say. One familiar with the proceedings and persons of this pavilion could choose his own time for entering the yellow room."

"He could not have entered it if anybody had been in the laboratory," said M. de Marquet.

"How do we know that?" replied Larsan. "There was the dinner in the laboratory, the coming and going of the servants in attendance. There was a chemical experiment being carried on between 10 and 11 o'clock with M. Stangerson, his daughter, and Daddy Jacques engaged at the furnace in a corner of the high chimney. Who can say that the murderer—an intimate, a friend—did not take advantage of that moment to slip into the yellow room after having taken off his boots in the lavatory?"

"It is very improbable," said M. Stangerson.

"Doubtless, but it is not impossible. I assert nothing. As to the escape from the pavilion, that's another thing—the most natural thing in the world."

For a moment Frederic Larsan paused—a moment that appeared to us a very long time. The eagerness with which we awaited what he was going to tell us may be imagined.

"I have not been in the yellow room," he continued, "but I take it for granted that you have satisfied yourselves that he could have left the room only by way of the door. It is by the door, then, that the murderer made his way out. At what time? At the moment when it was most easy for him to do so—at the moment when it became most explainable—so completely explainable that there can be no other explanation. Let us go over the moments which followed after the crime had been committed. There was the first moment, when M. Stangerson and Daddy Jacques were close to the door ready to bar the way. There was the second moment, during which Daddy Jacques was absent and M. Stangerson was left alone before the door. There was a third moment, when M. Stangerson was joined by the concierge. There was a fourth moment, during which M. Stangerson, the concierge and his wife and Daddy Jacques were before the door. There was a fifth moment, during which the door was burst open and the yellow room entered. The moment at which the flight is explainable is the very moment when there was the least number of persons before the door. There was one moment when there was but one person—M. Stangerson. Unless a complicity of silence on the part of Daddy Jacques is admitted—in which I do not believe—the door was opened in the presence of M. Stangerson alone, and the man escaped.

"Here we must admit that M. Stangerson had powerful reasons for not arresting or not causing the arrest of the murderer, since he allowed him to reach the window in the vestibule and closed it after him. That done, Mlle. Stangerson, though horribly wounded, had still strength enough, and no doubt in obedience to the entreaties of her father, to refasten the door of her chamber with both the bolt and the lock before sinking on the floor. We do not know who committed the crime; we do not know of what wretch M. and Mlle. Stangerson are the victims, but there is no doubt that they both know! The secret must be a terrible one, for the father had not hesitated to leave his daughter to die behind the door which she had shut upon herself—terrible for him to have allowed the assassin to escape. For there is no other way in the world to explain the murderer's flight from the yellow room!"

The silence which followed this dramatic and lucid explanation was appalling. We all of us felt grieved for the illustrious professor, so driven into a corner by the pitiless logic of Frederic Larsan, so forced to confess the whole truth of his martyrdom or to keep silent and thus make a yet more terrible admission. The man himself, a veritable statue of sorrow, raised his hand with a gesture so solemn that we bowed our heads to it as before something sacred. He then pronounced these words in a voice so loud that it seemed to exhaust him:

"I swear by the head of my suffering child I never for an instant left the door of her chamber after hearing her cries for help; that that door was not opened while I was alone in the laboratory, and that, finally, when we entered the yellow room, my three domestics and I, the murderer was no longer there! I swear I do not know the murderer!"

Must I say it, in spite of the solemnity of M. Stangerson's words we did not believe in his denial? Frederic Larsan had shown us the truth, and it was not so easily given up.

M. de Marquet announced that the conversation was at an end, and as we were about to leave the laboratory Joseph Rouletabille approached M. Stangerson, took him by the hand with greatest respect, and I heard him say:

"I believe you, monsieur."

I here close the citation which I have thought it my duty to make from M. Maleine's narrative. I need not tell the reader that all that passed in the laboratory was immediately and faithfully reported to me by Rouletabille.

CHAPTER XII.

Frederic Larsan's Cane.

It was not till 6 o'clock that I left the chateau, taking with me the article hastily written by my friend in the little sitting room which M. Robert Darzac had placed at our disposal. The reporter was to sleep at the chateau, taking advantage of the to me inexplicable hospitality offered him by M. Robert Darzac, to whom M. Stangerson in that sad time left the care of all his domestic affairs. Nevertheless he insisted on accompanying me to the station at Epinay. In crossing the park he said to me:

"Frederic is really very clever and has not belied his reputation. Do you know how he came to find Daddy Jacques' boots? Near the spot where we noticed the traces of the neat boots and the disappearance of the rough ones there was a square hole, freshly made in the moist ground, where a stone had evidently been removed. Larsan searched for that stone without finding it and at once imagined that it had been used by the murderer with which to sink the boots in the lake. Fred's calculation was an excellent one, as the success of his search proves. That escaped me, but my mind was turned in another direction by the large number of false indications of his track which the murderer left and by the measure of the black footmarks corresponding with that of Daddy Jacques' boots, which I had established without his suspecting it, on the floor of the yellow room. All which was a proof, in my eyes, that the murderer had sought to turn suspicion on to the old servant. Up to that point Larsan and I are in accord, but no further. It is going to be a terrible matter, for I tell you he is working on wrong lines, and I—I must fight him with nothing!"

At that moment we passed by the back of the chateau. Night had come. A window on the first floor was partly open. A feeble light came from it as well as some sounds which drew our attention. We approached until we had reached the side of a door that was situated just under the window. Rouletabille in a low tone made me understand that this was the window of Mlle. Stangerson's chamber. The sounds which had attracted our attention ceased, then were renewed for a moment, and then we heard stifled sobs. We were only able to catch these words, which reached us distinctly, "My poor Robert!" Rouletabille whispered in my ear:

"If we only knew what was being said in that chamber my inquiry would soon be finished."

He looked about him. The darkness of the evening enveloped us. We could not see much beyond the narrow path bordered by trees which ran behind the chateau. The sobs had ceased.

"LORD RECEIVE MY SPIRIT," HENDERSON'S LAST WORDS

Execution of 17 Year Old Youth Convicted of Murder of Margaret McPherson Took Place at Gaol This Morning--Prisoner's Nerve Never Forsook Him---Neck Was Broken by Fall and Death Ensued Immediately.

Robert Henderson, the 17-year-old murderer of aged Margaret McPherson, walked to his doom on the scaffold this morning with the same self-possession and reserve of feeling that have characterized his bearing ever since his arrest and confinement in the Peterborough county gaol. He ascended the steps of the scaffold in the inner yard of the gaol without faltering or hesitating, and without any assistance.

"LORD, DELIVER MY SPIRIT."

Turnkey Rae walked alongside the youth and gently held him by the left arm as he mounted to the place of execution, but he was not called upon to give him any aid whatever, as the boy maintained complete control of himself right up to the last moment. His only words on the scaffold were, "Lord, deliver my spirit." This was after the white cap had been drawn over his head, and the noose adjusted, preparatory to the release of the drop.

At seven o'clock the prisoner, accompanied by Sheriff Hall, Gaoler Nesbitt, Turnkey Rae, Canon Davidson, Rev. Dr. Langfeldt and Executioner Ellis, came from the side door to the gaol yard, and immediately the entire party walked up the approach to the scaffold. Canon Davidson, attired in his surplice, walked at the right hand of the prisoner and read a service as the sombre descent was made. The service used by Canon Davidson was largely impromptu, with addition of certain forms of prayer prescribed to be used for those sentenced to death.

DEATH WAS INSTANTANEOUS

As is the customary procedure of a condemned man's spiritual adviser at an execution, Canon Davidson read the Lord's prayer, and as he said the words "deliver us from evil" the lever was pulled, the gates of the trap flung open, and the prisoner shot to his death. His neck was broken by the fall, and to all intents he was killed when the rope tightened. The drop was seven feet.

HEART BEAT NINE MINUTES

The trap was sprung at 7.02. At 7.09 Dr. Caldwell, the gaol physician, announced that the prisoner's pulse had stopped beating, and at 7.11—nine minutes after the lever was pulled—he announced that the heart had stopped beating, and life was, therefore extinct.

THE FORMAL VERDICT.

At 7.13 the body was cut down by the executioner, and laid out on the grass. With the assistance of Gaoler Nesbitt and Turnkey Rae, he lifted it into the coffin and it remained there with the white cap still over the face, until it was viewed by the jury and examined by Coroner Dr. T. N. Greer. The jury, of which Mr. George E. Elliott was foreman, rendered the formal verdict that Henderson had come to death by hanging at the Peterborough gaol.

BURIED IN CEMETERY

A special concession was made by the sheriff, the body being handed over to Canon Davidson, and was buried with religious ceremony this morning at Little Lake cemetery.

FEW WITNESSES.

Only a small number were allowed to witness the hanging. Other than those mentioned these included one representative from each of the following papers: Telegram, Toronto; News, Toronto; Standard, Havelock; Times, Peterborough, and Review, Peterborough. Chief Bennett, of Havelock, the officer who arrested Henderson, was also present at the hanging.

SLEPT PEACEFULLY.

At five o'clock this morning Henderson awakened from a refreshing sleep. Throughout the night he slept peacefully, in spite of the fact that he was fully appraised of the fate that was waiting him in the morning. He ate a good breakfast.

"ARE YOR THE EXECUTIONER?"

When the executioner went to pinion Henderson shortly before seven o'clock, the prisoner reached out his hand and said:

"Are you the executioner?"

"Unfortunately, I am," the hangman replied.

"Good-bye," said Henderson.

CLERGYMAN DEEPLY AFFECTED

The prisoner said farewell to the sheriff, gaoler, turnkey and the two clergymen, and thanked them all for their many kindnesses. His arms were then strapped, and he was escorted to the gallows.

At the execution Canon Davidson was deeply affected, and turned his face away as Ellis pulled the lever.

The prisoners in gaol were taken from the corridors to the exercise yard and could not witness the hanging.

WAS SUBMISSIVE.

The executioner was very diplomatic in dealing with the prisoner. He admonished him to bear up as well as possible, and told him that he was simply doing his duty in carrying out the sentence.

Henderson never once struggled or offered any resistance.

WONDERFUL NERVE.

He displayed wonderful nerve. Executioner Ellis informed the Review that he never saw a greater display of self possession in the course of his career as executioner. The hanging of Henderson this morning makes the eighty-third execution he has officiated at in this country and England.

THE EXECUTIONER.

He is an Englishman of small stature, clean shaven, and wears glasses. He speaks with a refined accent, and appears a man of excellent education.

He would not give out anything detailed concerning himself for publication, as he promised the Minister of Justice, he said, that he would not do so on account of the fact that the information would become garbled and give rise to undesirable publicity.

Henderson is the youngest offender that was ever hanged in Canada, and in response to a query from the Review Ellis stated that he was the youngest person at whose execution he had officiated.

BY THE LIGHT OF THE MOON

The garden party and strawberry social held on the lovely lawn of St. John's last night under the auspices of the A.Y.P.A., was a great success. Spacious tents were erected and flowers, candies, strawberries and cream, ice cream, lemonade and cake, were all in great demand, everything being practically sold out. The Grand Opera House orchestra, led by Mr. R. J. Devey, gave a fine instrumental concert and Misses Lee and Bradley each very kindly gave a song. After an excellent rendition of the duett "Excelsior," The beauty of the grounds were greatly enhanced by the electric lights most kindly installed by the F. R. J. Macpherson Co.

A large crowd assembled and all were sorry when at 10 p.m. the playing of "God Save the King" brought a pleasant evening to a close. The A.Y.P.A are to be congratulated on again bringing off such a successful evening and the conveners, Miss English Miss Shirley Wesley, Miss Caniff and the president, Mr. R. J. Devey, are very thankful to all who so kindly helped by supplying goods for sale, and for the valuable help rendered all day, by various members of the congregation.

THE APPOINTMENT OF FIRE MARSHALL WILL BE TAKEN UP

Chief Howard, the secretary of the Fire Chief's Association for the provinces, has written the members of the executive advising them of an executive meeting which will be held at the Lombard street fire station, Toronto, at ten o'clock in the forenoon of July 1st.

This meeting will be called for the purpose of arranging topics and the programme for the next annual meeting and also to decide the date and place of meeting.

It is the intention to take up the appointment of a fire marshall, whose duties would be to attend to fire escapes and other equipment for the protection of lives in time of fire.

A CITY OF SHOWDOM IS WHAT HAAG'S CIRCUS WILL BE

When [illegible] in slumberland and the few that are awake are rubbing their eyes, there will have sprung up a complete city at the usual show grounds in Peterborough, June 28. The first that is to be known of the arrival of this wonder city is when the long show trains come puffing in, and afterwards the cars are placed and then begins the unloading of the many wagons tableaus and, animals of the Hague shows. In the meantime there will be noticed a bunch of men on the first arrival of the show trains starting towards the baseball park with a leader, who to the new city is a boss canvass man; he will lay out the way the different tents will set in the tented city, at the same time placing an iron pin here and there, afterwards where will set either a tent pole or else a stake will be driven in the ground. In the meantime wagons will arrive at the show ground, the first of which is the cook-house wagon, containing the cooking utensils and the mammoth steel range. On the arrival of this wagon at the show grounds some of the men proceed to put up the cook tent, while others are putting up the other tents that constitute the tented city.

Everywhere hustle and bustle is to be seen, but no confusion. Amidst all this can be heard the sounding of a bell, and at once activity ceases, as the bell will call the working men to breakfast. The working men sit down to breakfast in one big, long dining tent, while in another dining tent the bosses and heads of the different departments are being served their breakfast. After breakfast is over once more the tented city takes on activity.

CALLING PERFORMERS.

Promptly at 8 o'clock the bell will sound again. It is then calling the performers, musicians and other people to breakfast in a separate dining tent. At 9 o'clock Mr. Haag, the owner of the tented city, will be found breakfasting with his family in a separate tent, especially made for that purpose. The city now is taking on activity, and here and there can be seen men leading horses and animals; others shining harness, and still others washing wagons, all preparing for the street aprade, which takes place on the public streets at 11 o'clock a.m.

On the parade returning to the show grounds, after traversing the principal streets of the city, there is a free outside exhibition, and while this is going on the performers are having dinner, and promptly at 1 o'clock the doors are thrown open to the public, and at 2.15 p.m. the performance of the Haag shows begins. Again at 7 o'clock are the doors thrown open to the public, the night's performance beginning promptly at 8 o'clock.

A FEW PRIZES

Proposed Sparring Contest at Cobourg is Dropped

The printers, one and all, appear decided to leave no stone unturned in their efforts to make a success of their outing to Cobourg on Saturday afternoon nex. Two huskies from the locals—Ed. Sharrard and Kid. Rogers—have offered to give a 25-round exhibition match, provided space large enough can be found. The featherweights, Les. Myland (6 feet 3 inches) and Ben Taylor (3 feet 6 inches) want a knock out encounter. The secretary informed these ultra enthusiasts that quite a number of ladies have signified their intention of coming, so these gentlemen cautiously decided to drop this drawing card—We want the ladies. We may add that Mr. Rogers has kindly offered free entry into his immovable automobile—the "Doango," and great times are expected.

The Master Printers of the city wish their assistants well on Saturday afternoon next, and, without exception, have donated towards the prize list. The Examiner Printing Co. have given a valuable set of dishes that will go to the adult ticket holder who has the corresponding number when the drawing competition comes off at the conclusion of the sports. The Review Printing Company presents something in the fancy china line, the Times office following suit. The Garden Printery donates a box of cigars to soothe the nerve racked winners of the tug of war. Mr. F. Clarke, an old friend of the typos (why we cannot understand) gives a solid gold pin, engraven with the winner's initials. Mr. Thomas Barrie sends a shirt, so the committee wisely placed it in a race where the likely winner is known to be minus such an article.

Sir,—How is it that the Salvation Army Band does not appear at Victoria Park this season to give a weekly concert?

Are their intentions discouraged or is the city treasury down too low?

A WOMAN WINS ENGLISH BALLOON CHAMPIONSHIP

Mrs. Acholton Harbored Travelled 115 Miles in Race—At Times Rose to Height of 7000 Feet—Has Crossed Channel Six Times.

Special to the Review.

London, Eng., June 23.—Mrs. Ashcoton Harbored to-day won the title of champion baloonist of England, by travelling 115 miles in a race that started from Hurlingham. Mrs. Harbored covered thirty miles more than any of her other opponents in the race, descending at Beccles.

At times she rose to a height of seven thousand feet, and when she descended she was on the verge of collapse from cold, having to be assisted from the car.

Mrs. Harbored has won aerial fame before, and is known as a daring woman. She has crossed the Channel six times in her own baloon.

COULD NOT FIND HER PARENTS AT TORONTO

Lost at the Union Station, Toronto, was the predicament in which Olive Pert, the ten-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Pert, found herself the other morning.

Her father recently went to Toronto and the mother, with other members of the family, went up to the city this week.

The little daughter, Olive, was left here, but she went up to Toronto Tuesday morning, but did not see her parents at the station.

She was taken in hand by officials at the station and steps will be taken to find her father and mother.

LABOR DEPARTMENT WON'T INTERFERE IT IS LIKELY IN TRAIN DIFFICULTIES

Special to the Review.

Ottawa, June 23.—From information given out to-day it is improbable the Labor Department will have anything more to do with the difficulties between the trainmen and the companies.

The Minister of Labor is not in the city, but it was stated that now that the board of concilliation has been appointed and made its finding, the matter is ended so far as the Labor Department is concerned.

It is now for the interests involved either to accept the finding or get together and conduct any further negotiations themselves. The department cannot interfere with the finding of the board.

COMMITTEE'S REPORT ON WARDEN'S ADDRESS

The following is the business transacted by the County Council at the conclusion of the address by Warden Moher:

On motion of Councillor Shaw, Councillors Breault, Graham, Porter, Howden, Darling and Garbutt were appointed a committee to deal with the address.

After the tenders for debentures were read the tender of Amelius Jarvis was accepted.

School Inspector Lees made a report showing amounts of regular government grants to the different school sections of the county.

A communication from Lakefield was read referring to the appointment of an additional examiner re extrance school examinations. Mr. Lees' opinion was that it would not be advisable to take any action.

Mr. Tanner, reeve of Lakefield, urged upon the council the advisability of having an examiner holding a position such as principal of a school where a continuation class is being maintained, setting out the fact that the examiners at present were chiefly high school teachers.

The matter was referred to the Committee on Schools, on motion of Messrs. Breault and Howden.

Council then adjourned to go into committee.

WEDNESDAY MORNING SESSION.

Several communications were read, and, upon motion, referred to their respective committees.

The report of the committee on the Warden's address, which follows, was read and adopted.

Report of the Committee on the Warden's address:

1. We join with him in expressing our deep regret at the sudden and unexpected death of our late King and trust that our present Sovereign, King George the V., will show the same deep interest to promote the welfare of his subjects as was so eminently the characteristic of his lamented father.

2. We view with great appreciation the progress that the agricultural districts of the country are making and feel assured that the industry of the farmers will be blest with an abundand return in the harvest season.

The new Leahy system now being proceeded with, is one which the Council has carefully considered and which has been approved of by those having practical experience in such matters and we have no doubt that the system when completed, will satisfactorily fulfil the purpose intended.

4. The various matters dealt with in the address will, we are sure, be fully and carefully considered by the different committees before which they will come.

5. We desire to express our high approval of the deep interest shown, and the careful attention given by the Warden to all questions tending to advance the interests of the county and to assure him of our cordial and united support in the work of carrying on the responsible duties pertaining to his office.

Respectively submitted,

A. BREAULT,
Chairman.

TALES OF THE FLEET.

Remarkable Achievements That Illuminate the Annals of the Navy.

In the year 1806 occurred the most amazing instance of naval strategy on a small scale ever placed on record. Britain was then at war with a very large part of the world, and privateering was an exceedingly profitable as well as an honorable profession.

The privateer Tamar, in the course of her meanderings, captured the little Bon Voyage, and placed a prize crew of 14 aboard her, under charge of the first lieutenant, with instructions to make for the first friendly port. Next day the faster sailing Tamar was out of sight, and, to the consternation of the little prize crew, there appeared on the scene the Le Brave, a renowned French privateer, which mounted 16 guns, and had a crew of 130 tried men.

All seemed lost, and, indeed, the Bon Voyage's little complement of men were already packing up their traps preparatory to a trip across to the other ship, when the brave lieutenant hit upon a stratagem of so extraordinary a nature as veritably to read like some extract from a sensational boy's tale.

He knew that the Le Brave's invariable mode of fighting whenever possible was by boarding, so he brought all his four guns to the side on which she was approaching, loaded them, and caused the rest of the ship's ammunition to be thrown overboard. He next caused the only boat aboard to be plentifully supplied with firearms and moored under the stern out of sight. As the Le Brave drew near they let her have a broadside, a compliment which was soon returned, and a few minutes later the aggressor's bow was fouling the Bon Voyage's rigging, and her sailors streaming aboard.

The lieutenant at this very moment retreated with his men to the stern cabin, and the French, in their ignorance of the stratagem, followed, and actually placed sentries at the door, so that they could not sally forth. The prize crew, however, had meantime gained their boat by an open port, precisely as arranged, and were rowing stealthily round the ship to the Le Brave, which had now parted company with her quarry, and boarding her, they made short work of the four sailors left in charge.

The astonishment of the Frenchmen when they found the British flag floating proudly over their ship can better be imagined than described. They still had the men, four guns, and a good ship, but, to their chagrin, not a single barrel of powder. The gallant lieutenant assured them of the pleasure the exchange had afforded him, and at the muzzles of their own cannon he obliged them to promise to navigate the Bon Voyage to the port he himself was making for. A day or two later, however, the Tamar came in sight and relieved the [illegible]chmen of their disagreeable task.

These were the days of blood-thrilling feats on the water. Just a year or two previous to the episode just recorded Commander Munro, of the small 16-gun brig Transfer, won for himself imperishable renown by a most audacious performance. He inadvertently ran into a powerful Spanish squadron one day, but hoisted the American flag, and was allowed to pass warship after warship unchallenged, any one of which could have sunk his ship with ease. Bringing up the rear of the Spanish fleet was a merchantman prize, deeply laden with valuable cargo, and the temptation to seize her was irresistible, and seize her the British commander did, practically within gunshot of the protecting warships. The very audacity of the thing wrought its complete success, for the Spaniards felt sure that a British fleet was close at hand, and, not wishing just then to be drawn into a battle, they allowed the Transfer and her capture to escape.

A meritorious feat of arms against the same enemy was the recovery of the British ship Hermione. The crew of the Hermione had mutinied, killed their officers, and then surrendered the ship to the Spaniards, who, to their discredit, sheltered the men and fitted the vessel out as a man-of-war. The Hermione when thus completed lay moored almost under the guns of two powerful batteries, and the fact coming to the ears of the captain of the H. M. Surprise, who was cruising in the neighborhood at the time, he determined to cut her out, undeterred by the obviously grave danger of such a mission. The Hermione had a large crew on board, and, though taken by surprise, they fought desperately, but the batteries upon which the Spanish relied so much were unable to afford any assistance; not knowing which side was in possession of the ship; and before they could satisfy themselves as to this the Hermione was sailing proudly away to rejoin the service she had been foully torn from.

CONCERNING WOMEN.

The majority of women in France are wage earners in one capacity or another. The average sum paid to dressmakers is 3 francs, or 60 cents, a day.

Mrs. Elizabeth Cochran Seaman, better known as Nelly Bly, the globe girdler, is now the manager of the Ironclad works of Brooklyn, a concern which employs many hands.

Mrs. Rosa Herrman is president of the H. Herrman Lumber and Furniture company, an American concern, which has bra[illegible] offices in London, Hamburg and Natal. Mrs. Herrman lives in Stuyvesant square, New York.

Mrs. William Salter has been elected a member of the London county council. She is the wife of a physician who was defeated a few days ago for parliament. Mrs. Salter made a house to house canvass, and she credits her election to the support of women. She was opposed by two men, and she topped their combined vote. The chief planks in her platform were lower rents and lower taxes, two things which appealed especially to the women in the district she now will represent in the council.

Lady Duff-Gordon is a warm admirer of the American woman. This member of the British nobility claims that an American woman can keep a secret. She says that in America women are treated on equal terms with men. "They are better educated than Englishwomen, as a rule. There is no country where woman is treated with greater courtesy. The result is seen in the independence of character and the self reliance and dependability of the American woman."

The Advantage a Chinaman Has In Case of a Rejection.

Dr. Isaac T. Headland, a resident of Pekin for many years, throws a new light on the new women of China in The Travel Magazine. Taking up the relations between the sexes and especially the Chinese method of getting a wife, the writer repeats a conversation with a young Chinaman who had recently become engaged to a Chinese maiden with whom he had never spoken.

"We students have a very great advantage over the old Chinese method of finding a wife and getting engaged," said my Celestial friend.

"What do you mean?" I inquired.

"Well, you see by the old Chinese method a man can never see his wife until she is brought to his home unless he can bribe the middleman to allow him to stand on the street corner and see her pass by in a cart."

"And what advantage do you have?"

"We see the girls in church," he answered. "They also can see us. We have sisters in the girls' school, they have brothers in the college, and when we go home during vacation we can learn all about each other."

"This is an advantage."

"In my judgment," he continued, "we have a better method than even you foreigners have."

"How is that?"

"Well, you see," he continued, "after we have selected the lady we want we can have a middleman go and ask her for us, while you have to go and ask the lady yourself."

"But," I objected, "we can get so much better acquainted by our method."

"Yes, that's true," he admitted, "but doesn't it make you awfully angry if you ask a girl to marry you and she refuses?"

It was necessary to admit that there were advantages in the middleman method which had never occurred to me, and, while I was not ready to acknowledge that his new found method was better than mine, I could still see that the force which brought it about was bringing woman out of her seclusion and placing her on a level with her brother and her future husband.

FINISHED MAN OF THE WORLD.

Cardinal Merry del Val Possesses the Charm of Perfect Manners.

If not in diplomacy, at any rate in learning, manners and physical appearance Cardinal Merry del Val is an ideal prelate, writes Walter Littlefield. He works harder than anybody in the Vatican and has a precise, rapid manner in going through an immense amount of business. Every morning he has a half hour's conference with the Pope; every evening he receives all visitors who believe they have information which may be of value to the Pope or papacy. Merry del Val listens, makes notes, and politely dismisses them. Twice a week, Tuesday and Friday, he receives the ambassadors of the Catholic powers. The following description of his person, given by the Vicomte de Colleville, is suggestive:

"His figure is tall, slight, and graceful. He has a large forehead, a mouth with an amiable smile, and large, black eyes, which give to his expression something of sweetness and sincerity. From all his person there emanates a perfume of exquisite distinction—the charm and seduction of perfect manners. The sound of his voice is harmonious and his conversation brilliant and captivating. In a word, he is a finished man of the world."

Although the cardinal secretary of state has an apartment situated in the oldest and most beautiful part of the Vatican, neither his work nor his pleasures are confined to these precincts. At No. 11, in the Via della Valtellina, outside the Portese Gate, there is a rose-colored villa with high walls and spacious vineyards. It formerly belonged to the nuns of the Sacred Heart; it is now the playground of Merry del Val. There he entertains his social friends. They play bowls, sup in the open, or swing. Yes, the papal secretary of state actually has a swing at his villa and he is very fond of it.

He is also fond of automobiling, and often motors from his villeggiatura to Castle Gandolfo, or to Subiaco, Vicarello, or to the shores of Lake Bracciona. He is an expert swimmer, and by regular exercise keeps himself in the best physical condition.

The World's Largest Crab.

The gigantic Japanese crab, measuring twelve feet, is probably the largest crustacean in the world. It is a type of the spider crab, which inhabits the waters of the group of islands forming the empire of Japan. The body portion is the size of a half bushel measure, while its two great arms, or "feelers," could easily encircle the figure of a man. Its eight arms, or legs, resemble huge bamboo [illegible] if strung into one line they would reach to the top of a four storey apartment building. One of the extraordinary peculiarities of this crab is the faculty of assuming a disguise by affixing pieces of seaweed and sponges to the body.

Guarding the Cash.

The gypsies in some parts of Europe have a curious way of looking after the honesty of their money collector. The person intrusted with the mission of taking the hat around among the crowd has a living fly put into his left hand, while he holds the hat with his right. When he returns with the funds he must bring the fly back alive as a sign that he has not taken any money from the common property, but if the fly be wanting or even dead he does not get even his share of the money.

Pleasure of Wisdom.

"Your boy likes to go to school better than he used to," said the relative.

"Yes," answered Mr. Bliggins. "He's getting old enough to enjoy learning a lot of things so that he can come home and dazzle me with his superior knowledge."

Two hundred and fifty clothes-pegs have been found in a jackdaw's nest in a chimney at Moffat.

For the Children

Top Spinning One of the Most Ancient Sports.

SOME TOP DESIGNS.

Top spinning is one of the oldest games in the world. It has been played for thousands of years, and there are few even of the savage nations of Asia and Africa who don't play the game with some sort of top. Long before Columbus sailed for America the Indians knew a good deal about tops and top spinning. The Sioux whittled them out of bits of wood something like those shown in the picture. In Ceylon, Siam and China nearly all the tops are so fixed that they whistle or sing when they spin. The ordinary top used by the American boy is probably the most popular in the world. It is extensively used in England and in all of her colonies. The German top is larger and more expensive, and the French top is quite different in shape. None of them will stand the pegging of the stubby little American top.

About the Screech Owl.

The barn owl, or screech owl, as it is often called, from its weird, piercing shriek, so unlike the deep, mellow hoot of some of its near relatives, is the best known of its kind. It is also the best worth knowing and most useful of its tribe and a good friend of the farmer, for it destroys hundreds of the farmer's greatest enemies—rats and mice.

In its favorite haunt, the barn, it will stand bolt upright in some dark corner or on a lofty beam, seemingly asleep, but with eyes and ears open. At the slightest rustle in the straw below it is all attention, head bent downward and bright eyes gazing intently at the spot from whence the sound comes. If the mouse or rat shows itself, without a movement of his wings the owl simply "drops" upon his prey and seldom fails to grasp it in his strong, sharp talons. Flying back to his perch with it, he seems to meditate awhile, then gravely bolts his victim whole and solemnly waits for the next sound from below. His method of swallowing the mouse he has caught is curious. He takes it from his talons and holds it in his beak by the middle for a few moments, then by a quick jerk of the head throws it in the air and catches it by the head. A second jerk sends it head first down his throat, except for the tail, which remains hanging out for another minute of meditation, when a third jerk puts it out of sight.

India Rubber.

When we think of the many different uses to which india rubber is now put we cannot repress a smile as we read the following allusion to it in Dr. Priestley's book on perspective, published in 1770, which, it is said, is the earliest mention of the substance: "I have seen a substance excellently adapted to the purpose of wiping from paper the marks of a black lead pencil. It is sold by Mr. Nairne, mathematical instrument maker, opposite the Royal Exchange. He sells a cubical piece of about half an inch for 3 shillings, and he says it will last several years."

Why?

Why is a lazy dog like a hill? Because he is a slow pup (slope up).

Why is a bee a great deceiver? Because he is a humbug.

Why is a jailer like a musician? Because he fingers the keys.

What is that which never asks a question, yet requires ma[illegible]? A doorbell.

Master Robin will teach the birdlings to sing the sweetest and latest songs, such as 'The Merry Widow Waltz,' 'I'm Afraid to Go Home In the Dark,' etc. All who wish to join the summer school will leave word at his nest."

According to a prominent Canadian public official, recently returned from Australia, the good people in America who regard the recent sweeping victory of the "Federal Parliamentary Labor Party" in the Commonwealth as a slap in the face for imperialism, are very much mistaken, for this gentleman met the Hon. Mr. Fisher, and found that he is really a very progressive imperialist. He advocates a very progressive policy in naval and military matters, and even goes so far as to publicly proclaim his belief in universal compulsory military and naval service as the only effective means of national insurance against war, and also as a means of strengthening the national character. Mr. Fisher was very anxious to find out from my informant all he could about Canada's militia system, and had had experienced colonial officers sent to all the leading countries in the world to obtain data to be used in developing the most satisfactory military and naval systems for the Commonwealth. He is a Scotchman by birth, and has all the Scot's enthusiasm for the Empire.

My informant stated that he was surprised to find Mr. Fisher so well informed regarding Canada and Canadian public men. The Australian statesman admitted having studied the lives of Sir John A. Macdonald, Sir Charles Tupper and Sir Wilfrid Laurier, and said that he had instructed the Australian Parliamentary librarian to procure all the books he could on the development of the Canadian constitution, the national defensive force, and the various departments of the Dominion and Provicial Governments.—Chesterfield in The Family Herald.

THE GREAT "QUEERITY" PROBLEM

What Happened When Frank Williams Tried to Solve It

BY ARTHUR MORGAN LANGWORTHY

PRAIRIEVILLE ACADEMY and Groveville Preparatory School had competed in a grand dual athletic meet every year, as far back as any one could remember.

The results were always close, as the schools were most evenly matched, and rarely was a contest won by more than a margin of one or two points; so you can imagine the keen rivalry between the two seats of learning.

Another thing that gave an added interest to the annual meet was a peculiar "stunt" that marked each struggle. This was the event called the Queerity. Introduced years ago to add a bit of fun to the struggle, it made such a hit that it became a recognized feature. It didn't count as much as the other events in the scoring, but on several occasions the winning of the Queerity decided the meet. So each school regarded it pretty seriously, even if the public took it as a joke.

Usually it constituted a roaring comedy

But His Haste Was Fatal, for He Stuck Fast

to the spectators. The queerities of the past included handspring races, stilt races, "chariot" races on oval wheels, &c., and the queerity of 1910 was called the great barrel dash.

Don't you think it meant just rolling a barrel. No such easy thing as running behind a barrel was allowed. The racer had to run on the barrel and stay on top of it. Each racer must have considerable acrobatic ability, for it is quite a circus feat to balance yourself on an overturned barrel and propel it forward at a fair clip. In order to revolve the barrel so it will roll forward you must keep stepping forward, somewhat as if you were trying to run backward on a treadmill.

So when the joint athletic committee announced what the next Queerity was to be the whole academy naturally turned to Bob Edwards to uphold its honor in this event, for Bob was the greatest acrobat and contortionist in the school. He could do numerous balancing acts and could even walk a tight rope as far as twenty feet. But with all his attainments he found barrel rolling needed a great deal of training to attain the necessary control and balance, and so formed the habit of practising on any promising looking barrel he happened to find. And here is where his enthusiasm overcame his judgment, and he met with the disaster that directly resulted in the great queerity problem.

It happened this way:—About a month before the athletic meet Bob happened to pass through the academy hall, and spied the big barrel that usually stood under the stairs, into which the waste paper baskets were emptied. Unfortunately it was empty. Bob knew that at this hour Mr. Hackett, the principal, was upstairs with a class in algebra. Bob rolled the barrel out from under the stairs, hopped upon it and began his lesson in this new branch of athletic learning. All would have been well had "Hack"—as the boys irreverently called him—been where Bob thought he was, and had the barrel responded properly to the control of Bob's dancing feet.

Bob's idea was to propel it down the hall. The barrel didn't see it that way, so it suddenly turned at right angles, rolled out from under poor Bob and shot toward the door of the nearest classroom just as Mr. Hackett opened it.

That barrel not only upset Mr. Hackett right before the whole laughing class but it upset his dignity so that when Bob passed through the cyclone that followed the young acrobat found himself condemned to remain after school each afternoon for the next thirty days.

All pleadings for pardon were rejected by Mr. Hackett. He was a stern disciplinarian, who believed in ruling with a rod of iron.

When a deputation composed of the leading athletes of the academy ventured to appeal to his "school spirit" he dismissed them curtly, telling them that while he was sorry it interfered with their plans discipline must be maintained even if the school lost a dozen victories.

Frank Williams knew the principal's peculiarities probably as well as any one in the school.

"No, it isn't so much that he don't care whether we win or not," remarked Frank afterward, "but Hack can't forgive Bob for making such a chump of him before the class. That's what's the real trouble. He's been interested enough in the other track meets, even if he did make everybody 'sore' and uncomfortable; but he used to give us good points at that. Now the thing to do is to fix up a scheme to win out anyhow."

"But how are we going to get Bob in shape if he has to stay in every afternoon? You know Mr. Hackett locks up that classroom tight as a prison. He'll do just what he's done to every one of us some time or other—lock him in and then come back around six to let him out. How are you going to do it? If it was any of us we could train at some other time in the day, but Bob's father nearly works him to death in his store, besides making him do chores up at the farm. He never has any time off except that little bit after school," said Ned Wilson, gloomily.

"And here's Hack gone and taken it all away by jailing him for a month! What chance has he got to get trained properly, with the Queerity coming off only a couple of days after his month's up?" added Greggy Gordon.

"Well, boys, I don't say I can solve the problem, but I'm going to try. I've got an idea already. It may get us into trouble if Hack finds it out, but the athletic honor of the school is in peril, and when it comes to choosing between defending that or knuckling down to discipline, me for honor every time!" cried Frank eloquently, if not very grammatically, and then he told them his plan.

The next day half an hour before school opened Frank Williams dodged from behind the hedge that bounded the school grounds and rapidly rolled a large sugar barrel across the yard, disappearing into the rear basement door, which was always left unlocked, as are most doors in the country.

That same day, half an hour after school closed, if Mr. Hackett had suddenly decided to return after locking Bob in his classroom he would have found it empty. Bob had escaped through the transom. The transom was part of Frank's scheme. For jailing purposes Mr. Hackett had put a lock on it from the outside, but Frank planned to slip up stairs and unlock the transom every afternoon after the principal's departure. This he did. Bob climbed over and the two "streaked it" to the big, cool, cement paved basement, where a suppressed shout greeted them from the training committee.

"Well, I guess this comes pretty near solving the problem," chuckled Frank, as they proceeded to put Bob through his first afternoon's work. The cellar afforded a broad span of smooth space perfectly adapted to the gyrations of the rolling barrel, and the initial try-out proved a grand success.

The athletic prisoner trained faithfully day after day. Of course, the boys couldn't be there all the time, as most of them were in daily training themselves at Prairie Oval track, where the meet was to be held. But a lookout was always posted in the road to signal the principal's approach; then Bob would bustle upstairs and pop through the transom in time to receive his jailer; barely in time more than once.

One day Bob got an unexpected hurry call to "break training." Mr. Hackett had come by a different way, across the fields, surprising the lookout in the road. Bob literally hurled himself into the transom opening in a wild effort to get through, but his haste was fatal, for he stuck fast, while Frank (who happened to be with him) tried desperately to shove and pry him through.

Frank didn't desert him until they heard Mr. Hackett's key fumble in the main entrance, and then he rushed for the basement, forced to leave Bob's waving legs to greet the principal. By this time Bob was yelling at the top of his voice, for the sharp edge of the transom dug into him terribly.

As soon as he recovered from his surprise Mr. Hackett promptly grasped Bob by his legs and, giving one mighty yank, pulled the tortured youth out of the transom.

"Trying to escape, were you?" thundered Mr. Hackett sternly, taking Bob by the collar. "Well, we'll have to lock you up in safer quarters. Next time I'll find a place where you can't get out. I'll put you in the basement. Come down with me now while I take a look at it." And the principal, with one big hand on Bob's shoulder, forced the terror stricken prisoner down the stairs to inspect his new dungeon. Surely all was discovered now.

The other boys had escaped through the unlocked basement door, except Frank Williams, who daringly remained behind, crouching on the basement stairs to witness poor Bob's "finish." So thus it happened that Mr. Hackett's decision to explore the basement nearly resulted in Frank's discovery. He had just time to run down the stairs, roll the telltale barrel into an empty coal bin and dive behind it.

"I can't understand how Hackett missed seeing me or the barrel. He must be getting awfully near sighted, 'cause he looked right into the bin. There was a window there, and I know my legs stuck out from behind the barrel," said Frank afterward as he told of his escape to the others. But Mr. Hackett passed by, and after poking around the basement, had allowed Bob to go home.

How the boys laughed at the way Bob's transom disaster worked out! Instead of locking him in the stuffy classroom the next day the principal had put him in the cool basement exactly where he wanted to be and had locked the door leading to the stairs! Mr. Hackett of course saw that the door opening from the basement to the yard was locked, too, and while this barred out Bob's trainers it also dispensed with the need of a lookout. Bob complained of being lonesome, but acknowledged even that was better than being almost squeezed to death every time he tackled the transom. And so the month passed, until the thirty days were finally up and Bob was released from his prison three days before the track meet.

If there had been any doubts as to the efficiency of the school training course, they were quickly dispelled, when the late prisoner was "tried out" by his trainers at Prairie Oval Track. He proved himself in fine condition, and as for barrels, he was master of them all.

The day of the meet found the stands at Prairie Oval packed with the pupils from both schools with their friends and families. Each event counted a total of six points, except the Queerity, which counted only one point. The other events counted three for a first, two for a second, and one for a third. But the Queerity winner only scored one, and second none. The scoring was close as usual, and the crowd worked itself into a frenzy of excitement as the contest proceeded.

The Queerity took place about the middle of the programme. Mr. Hackett had attended the meet invested with his accustomed dignity. All through the contests he never even changed the expression on his severe face, and a stranger watching him would never have dreamed he was principal of one of the contending schools. In fact, the Grovevillers jeeringly said it gave them chills to look at him, sitting up there in the grand stand box, but that was Mr. Hackett's way.

Finally the Queerity was reached. The two contestants mounted the overturned barrels and each barrel was set on the starting line. The official announcer then explained the new "stunt" to the audience. The distance was 100 yards, and the man who made the distance still atop his barrel won. Every fall was penalized six feet.

Crack! barked the starter's pistol.

"They're off!" cried the crowd, and literally one was. For no sooner had they started than Bob's rival contestant swerved violently and ran his barrel directly into Bob. That racer flew into the air, and he landed heavily on the ground.

"Get up, Bob! Get up!" screamed the Academy, and right then and there the strange thing happened. Frank was busily engaged trying to stand Bob (who was dazed by the fall) on his barrel, when a deep voice shouted a command, and the next minute Mr. Hackett—of all people!—was at his side steadying Bob!

Perhaps it was the shock of discovering who this new assistant was that worked over the partly stunned Bob. Anyway, he straightened out wonderfully and in a few seconds was rolling along after his "field" in grand style. But the other had a big start.

Everybody's eyes were on Mr. Hackett, and, realizing the undignified position this sudden betrayal of interest had put him in, he walked stiffly back into the grand stand, where he watched the remainder of the race. It was a splendid finish. If the opening fall had not put Bob so far behind there would have been no race at all. But instead it resulted in making him a "scratch man." The Grovevilier reeled along on his barrel, falling more than once and earning the setback penalty, but, as Frank said, "Bob's style was faultless." If there ever was a barrel trained to roll under a boy's feet that barrel was. He gradually overhauled the other man until he brought his barrel up within a few feet of him.

They were now five feet from the finish line. Superbly balancing himself on his wabbling perch, with one supreme effort in which his dancing feet flew so fast you could hardly see them, Bob rolled his barrel over the line—a winner by six inches! Academy had won the Queerity!

He Found That Barrel Rolling Needed a Great Deal of Training

By winning it they also won the track meet, as it afterward turned out, for the final score was so close that the one precious point it gave enabled Academy to just beat Groveville.

"But what puzzles me is the way Mr. Hackett acted when Bob fell in the Queerity! Here he tries to help him to win, after doing everything to make him lose for a month," observed Jim Spencer, after it was all over.

"I'm not so sure about that!" exclaimed Frank. "I think that what he did at the Queerity just gives him dead away."

"What do you mean?" demanded Jim.

"Simply this. I'm going to put you some questions. I never mentioned it, but that morning when I sneaked the barrel into the basement I'm positive Hack saw me through a window. He got there early that day. Then, why didn't he ask me what I was doing with that barrel?

"Now for the next question. Why did he transfer Bob from the room to the basement after he caught him red handed, or rather legged, in the transom?

"Also, why didn't he discover me in the coal bin? He's 'nailed' me for things I've done in class that are a hundred times more secretive.

"And lastly, why did he act the way he did at he Queerity?"

"I'll answer 'em all for you in just one plain statement," remarked Frank, while his listeneres looked at him with a new light dawning on their surprised faces.

"I'm no Sherlock Holmes, but anybody who uses a little common sense will figure it out this way:—

"First of all, Bob made 'Hack' so mad that he lost his temper completely. He went too far and then regretted it. He wanted Academy to win, but it would be bad discipline to 'back water,' and he did the next best thing—he gave Academy 'a show' by letting us alone. So don't be too hard on him!"

"And, boys," concluded Frank, "I thought I had solved the great Queerity problem, but I'm positive most of the credit ought to go right to 'Hack!'"

Don't you think so, too?

That Barrel Not Only Upset Old Hackett, but It Upset His Dignity

A BORED PEN WIPER

BY VAN VLIET ADLING

I'm sore
That I can't run about on the floor
And roar.
But I sit on my shin
And I grin and I grin
Like a satisfied pig to the core.
You must know that I'm not a real beast—
At least
Not one that on gore makes a feast.
I've ceased
To expect much of life,
But the struggle and strife
And the pricks are daily increased.
For I'm naught but the slave of a pen,
You ken,
And I live on a desk in a "den,"
And then
There's a man who can't think
Spills a whole lot of ink
On the paper again and again.
He, too, is a terrible bore.
What's more,
He's sure he's an author of lore
Galore,
And his pen's such a pack
He wipes all on my back,
And that's what my bristles are for.

The Old Time May Day.

IN England May Day used to be universally celebrated by young men and women, as well as boys and girls. The May pole, trimmed with garlands and ribbons, was the principal feature of the village green, and about it the lads and lassies used to dance on May Day after they had elected the May King and Queen, who were supposed to be chosen because of their handsome faces and general popularity.

In this country we call the arbutus the May flower, but in England "the May" is the hawthorne, which is in bloom in every English country side on the first of May.

It used to be the custom for the young men to rise early on May Day to go to the woods to gather fresh boughs and blossoms. They would walk through the village and out into the woods singing this song:—

"Come, lads, with your bills,
To the woods we'll aw[illegible]:
We'll gather the boughs
And we'll celebrate May.

"We'll bring our load home,
As we've oft done before,
And leave a green bough
At each pretty maid's door."

Young girls and children would also go through the village leaving boughs and blossoms at each door and singing:—
"Here we come, poor Mayers all,
And thus we do begin
To lead our lives in righteousness,
Or else we die in sin.

"We have been rambling all this night
And almost all this day,
And now returned back again,
We have brought you a branch of May."

Refinement of Cruelty

Toronto Star.

"We do not think it would be merciful to the prisoner to direct a further trial," was the decision of Chief Justice Moss with regard to Murderer Henderson, and it is a fact that delays and postponements of executions are, to the prisoners, the refinement of cruelty. Furthermore, there have been cases known where the agonies of suspense endured by the prisoner under such conditions have been used as a plea for clemency which had better not have been exercised.

WARSAW DID NOT SHOW UP

Protested Game Goes to Havelock Juniors—Second of Semi-finals To-morrow Night

Special to the Review.

Havelock, June 24.—The meeting of the Midland Football League at Peterborough on Friday night last to consider the protest of Warsaw, and the counter protest of Havelock in regard to the game here on June 10th, resulted in both team's protests being allowed, and the executive ordered the game to be played here on Monday, June 20th. The Havelock team were all in readiness, but the Warsaw deputation failed to put in an appearance, so that the game goes to Havelock.

The second game of the semi-finals is billed to take place at Warsaw on Friday night of this week, when the Warsaw juniors will try their best to overcome Havelock's lead, and thus have another chance at the junior championship.

REMINISCENT OF ST. JOHN'S

Mr. Walter J. Nesbitt, of Fort Pierce, Fla., and of which it is gratifying to note that a Canadian is Mayor, one of the Peterborough old boys who have gone south many years ago, is a constant reader of the Review. Referring to St. John's chimes and the old church clock he writes as follows:—

Dear Review.—I was interested in your historical memories of the old St. John's clock. Having lived a close neighbor to the dear old church in my young days will you allow me to add a few words that may round out the history somewhat. Those with good memories will not have to go back quite 75 years to recollect the last effort to make the old clock keep time. It ran for a short time in the middle sixties. Later on it had a little exercise caused by a couple of bad boys—the writer and Master Harry Pentland, whom some may remember. On mischief bent we had entered the tower where a slat was out of the window of the north side, having reached the roof by way of the old Sunday school building. After scaring out the bats and the owls the writer wound up the old clock and released the escapement and you should have seen those old hands go round! It made such a racket that after one scared glance out of the hole in the dial, we saw a number of citizens staring in amazement at the clock, which—dead for so many years, had suddenly come to such astonishing life, we took to our heels narrowly escaping old Sexton Hodgins, who was coming on the run to see what had caused such energy on the part of the old clock.

I remember well the first note of the present bell which replaced the old cracked affair, which jarred our ears for so many years. Many pleasant memories crowd our recollections of old St. John's and my wife and I spent a most interesting and somewhat sorrowful hour wandering among its old records when in the old town last summer. My wife's aunt, the late Mrs. (Dr.) Bell, was the first bride who walked from the then new stone church. It is very pleasant to learn that, the fine old structure is to be fitted with a peal of bells.

Yours truly,
W. NESBITT.

Cow Testing

Every little while facts come to light which speak in far-reaching tones of the value of cow testing to the dairy farmers.

For instance, a letter is just received at the Department of Agriculture, Ottawa, from Mr. George Wise, of Shellmouth, Man., which reads as follows:—"I am pleased that I was led to see what my cows are doing, though now just entering my second year of recording each cow's doings, I see there is a great difference in the returns from the creamery, and, of course, it is there we should find the change. Note the remarkable gain for the first four months of 1910. In 1909, from January the 1st to April the 30th, we were milking 9 cows and received $129.59 for cream sold. In 1910, during the same period, we milked only eight cows and sold cream for $229.43. Further, we made butter this year for a household of nine persons. Last year we bought our butter. These are actual facts. The only difference in feed from last year is that I have fed bran extra all winter, but I have sold cows that were poor ones, though one of them made a good showing the first six months of the year. The cows picked up wonderfully on a soiling crop in September. The returns show it and every other animal went into winter quarters fat."

It will be noted that Mr. Wise, besides the butter used at home, made an extra hundred dollars in four months with a smaller herd. The cows are being selected. The records show which cows to keep and the fact that records are kept induces the owner to look after the herd better in every way. Cow testing pays.

BORDEN AT PORT PERRY GETS ROUSING WELCOME

Five Thousand Persons Hear Leader of the Opposition, W. S. Middlebro, and Hon. James S. Duff Speak—Discusses the Extravagance of Government.

Port Perry, June 24.—The fair grounds presented an animated scene yesterday afternoon, on the occasion of R. L. Borden's last meeting in this section of the province, in connection with his present tour. Five thousand people waited for hours in the hot sun to hear him. The town was decorated and the band of the 48th Highlanders was brought from Toronto. Visitors were present from north and south Ontario, West Durham and Victoria. Mr. Borden was accompanied by W. S. Middlebro, M.P., North Grey, and Hon. James S. Duff, Minister of Agriculture for Ontario.

On the arrival of Mr. Borden on the 9.30 train, he was tendered a civic welcome at the Town Hall by Reeve Hutcheson and the members of the Council.

At the fair grounds in the afternoon, following a program of sports, the speaking took place. The large grand stand was completely filled, and a speaking platform had been erected some 15 feet in front.

Mr. Borden, who was introduced by Peter Christie, ex-M.P., was given a cordial reception. Mr. Christie came in for a eulogy. During Mr. Christie's membership in the House, said Mr. Borden, he had rendered a distinguished and disinterested service, which was an honor to the community he represented.

"During the past ten years Canada has obtained her full share of the world-wide period of prosperity and development which has prevailed in all countries," said Mr. Borden. "No one expected that the present administration would fulfill the pledges of retrenchment by which they promised, if return to power, to reduce the annual expenditure by several millions. The Conservative party does not object to liberal expenditures, but it stands for the principle that public money should be expended only in the public interest, and that for every dollar paid the country should receive a dollar value."

Mr. Borden left for the east last night and will speak at Finch Saturday afternoon, the concluding meeting of the present tour.

It is interesting to note that the harness used on the team of horses which drew Mr. Borden in the procession was originally the property of Sir John A. Macdonald, when that gentleman lived in Kingston, and was used by him in the tandem turnout which is still remembered by those familiar with the great Conservative chieftain in those days.

THREE NEW KNIGHTS

Senator Ross, B. E. Walker and H. W. Bate Honored.

London, June 24.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—The King's birthday honors were announced yesterday. Senator George W. Ross, Byron E. Walker, president of the Canadian Bank of Commerce, and H. N. Bate of the Ottawa Improvement Commission, are made Knights Bachelor. J. G. Rutherford, veterinary director-general and live stock commissioner, is made a C.M.G.

The Imperial Service Order has been bestowed upon Achille Frechette, W. H. McIllree and W. J. Ptolemy.

Toronto, June 24.—Sir George W. Ross has been a prominent figure in Canadian public life for many years. As a school inspector back in the seventies he took an active part in the agitation for county model schools, and was also identified with the temperance cause. As member for West Middlesex in the House of Commons he introduced a resolution asking for the opening of negotiations looking to the establishment of reciprocal trade between Canada and the United States. For thirty-four years, first in the Commons and afterwards in the Legislature, Sir George represented West Middlesex. He was Minister of Education for Ontario from 1883 to 1899, and during that time devoted all his energies to the improvement of the provincial school system. In 1899 he succeeded Mr. Hardy as Premier, and held office until 1904. During his Premiership King George, who has included Senator Ross' name in his first list of birthday honors, visited Toronto and was entertained by the Government of Ontario. Sir George was appointed to the Senate somewhat over three years ago.

Sir Byron Walker is one of the most widely recognized authorities on banking on this continent, and has written many works on the subject. He has been connected with the Canadian Bank of Commerce since 1868, when he entered it as a clerk. In eighteen years he was general manager of the bank, in 1907 was elected president.

Among the other honors which he has received is his appointment to membership on the Quebec Battlefields Commission. On the retirement of Dr. John Hoskin, Mr. Walker was appointed to the position of chairman of the board of governors of the University of Toronto.

The township of Seneca, Haldimand County, is the birthplace of Sir Byron Walker, who is now in his sixty-fourth year. With banking as his main pursuit in life, Sir Byron Walker is also recognized as an authority of no mean standing on subjects of art and science.

BOOSTING THE CENSUS

Mr. Poudrier is 63 years old and has been married thrice. Seven children were born from his first marriage, 15 from his second and from the last nine.

Of these 31 children, 23 are still living, and the eldest is 45 years of age.

Important Timber Deal.

Quebec, June 24.—One of the largest timber deals in the Eastern Townships has been effected by the Brompton Pulp & Paper Co. acquiring the limits and sawmill of the Champoux Co., doing business in the Quebec central district.

The limits cover an area of 18,000 acres and $200,000 has been paid down, the balance to be paid when the final report is made.

MINISTERS ARE NOT IN TOUCH

Guelph, June 24.—That the teaching in religious colleges ran too much into scientific and theoretical theology, and was inadequate in the all-important teaching of the golden rule, was the contention of the Rev. Dr. Chown of Toronto, whose address on "The responsibility of the church for social conditions," was the most interesting feature of yesterday's sessions of the conference of Canadian Charities and Correction.

Dr. Chown declared that ministers needed to come down from the high flights of theology, and learn first hand by personal contact and observation the conditions that exist in the world, as what they needed most was a better acquaintance with the woes of the world and less of the mysteries of higher criticism. The Minister should be sent out to work as a man amongst men.

There were also fine addresses given yesterday morning by Chief of Police Slemin of Brantford and Staff Inspector Kennedy of the Toronto police force, on the subject of "The police force as a social reform agency." They argued that the police and clergymen did much the same work by different methods, and that on the average both were underpaid.

FRENCH-CANADIAN ANNUAL PICNIC

Windsor, June 24.—The annual picnic of the St. John the Baptist Society of Essex County was held yesterday at Langlois Grove, near Ojibway. It is the biggest event in French-Canadian circles in Western Ontario.

EARTHQUAKE IN NOVA SCOTIA

Yarmouth, June 24.—Seismic disturbances occurred Wednesday night at ten o'clock here, and in various parts of the country, greatly alarming the people. THIRTY SEVEN WERE KILLED IN WRECK

Four Cars of Mexican Troop Train Dashed Down Steep Grade—Engineer and Conductor Under Arrest Pending an Investigation — Cars Jumped Track.

Special to the Review.

Mexico City, June 23.—Thirty-seven persons were killed and as many others injured yesterday in the wreck of a troop train on the Manzanille Line of the national railway in the State of Colina. Four cars of the train broke away from the locomotive and dashed down a steep grade jumping the track at a terrific speed.

The dead include five officers and a number of soldiers with members of their families. Engineer Watson, an American, and Conductor Martinez, a Mexican, are under arrest, pending investigation.

MANY CITIZENS TOOK STRONG AVERSION TO EXECUTIONER

Ellis, the hangman, who officiated at Henderson's execution, was the centre of much attraction yesterday.

He was by no means a magnet to whom people were drawn in response to their finer feelings, but as soon as his identity was breathed, the word passed from mouth to mouth and everybody wanted to see the executioner of the unfortunate youth.

The bearing of Ellis caused some unfavorable comment. He is not inclined to be boastful, but speaks of his gruesome work in such a technical fashion that the average listener is repulsed. Quite a number who heard him refer to Henderson's hanging as "a nice clean job," waxed warm around the collar, and said things about him that weren't even mildly complimentary.

In a local hotel yesterday morning one citizen went at Ellis roughshod, called him a cur, expressed the opinion that his job was a disgraceful one, and abused the official of the scaffold generally. However, it was simply a case of throwing water on a duck's back, and the visiting worthy wasen't affected by the wordy bombshells hurled at him.

THINKS THAT MAN KILLED MIGHT BE HIS BROTHER

Mr. Robert Stevens, who boards at 339 Burnham street, Ashburnham, read an account in a paper of the death of a man in a mine disaster, whose description resembles that of his brother.

He is making inquiries, but up to the time of going to press no definite information could be had.

Irene Sewery, a pupil at Norwood, Man., was suspended for criticizing her teacher, and her father has taken action against the School Board to have her reinstated.

Blackburn and Jones, the two prospectors who engineered the rush into Cariboo Lake district in search of gold, were convicted of fraud at North Bay, and released on deferred sentence.

CLEVELAND'S POLICE CHIEF ACQUITTED

Cleveland, June 24.—Chief of Police Kohler was acquitted yesterday afternoon of charges of misconduct in office.

The decision was reached by the Civil Service Commission.

Kohler, whom Theodore Roosevelt termed "the best police chief in America," was tried on twenty-three specific charges of drunkenness, immorality and misconduct, filed with Mayor Baehr on May 24, by Attorney Schoeneman and Contracting Engineer P. J. Brown.

The commission held that evidence threshed out in Kohler's trial failed to show that he was unfit for office.

The decision deprives Mayor Baehr of power to remove Kohler on these charges, and he is automatically reinstated to the post from which he was suspended.

MAYOR GAYNOR'S DAUGHTER ELOPES

New York, June 24.—While Mayor William J. Gaynor was walking across Brooklyn bridge to his office yesterday a newly-wedded couple were eating their first honeymoon breakfast at the Plaza Hotel. This was not extraordinary in itself, but the fact that the bride at breakfast was the eloping daughter of the mayor made the coincidence one of more than ordinary interest. The bride and bridegroom are Mr. and Mrs. Harry Kermit Vingut.

Mrs. Vingut, the second daughter of Mr. Gaynor, is only 19 years old, while the broker bridegroom is 40. The difference in the couple's age is understood to have been the cause of Mr. Gaynor's objection to the marriage, which took place at Wilmington, Del., last Wednesday. Her sister also eloped to get married.

GOT LITTLE FOR THEIR TROUBLE

Niagara Falls, Ont., June 24.—After gaining entrance to the R. W. & O. Railway station at Ransomville Village, near here, on the American side, by jimmying a window, burglars early yesterday morning blew open the safe with nitro-glycerine. They secured only about $2 worth of chewing gum and some postal cards. Receipts of the day's sale of tickets had been taken home by Station Agent Bass when he locked the office Wednesday evening.

London, June 24.—There has been an increase of more than $55,000,000 in the national debt during the past year, according to a statement issued by the Secretary yesterday.

The dead weight was roundly $3,566,000,000 on April 1, and the total gross liabilities $8,813,000,000.

HIGH PRAISE FOR RHODES

London, June 24.—At the Rhodesian dinner Hon. J. X. Merriman, one-time Premier of Cape Colony, in succession to Dr. Jameson, and who is credited with having shattered the coalition with which the United States of South Africa proposed to begin the new era, referred to the work done by Cecil Rhodes, and remarked that if the federation of Australia, South Africa and Canada could be secured, the way would be paved for the federation of the Empire, and that had Rhodes lived he would have been the Alexander Hamilton of the Empire.

Rhodes, he said, had been the inspiring influence of his life.

Brown and Little, slack wire performers, will be on hand at the Printer's Picnic tomorrow.

CORONER'S JURY BRINGS IN OPEN VERDICT IN RIDDELL CASE

Norwich Mystery is Not Solved by Investigation—Dr. Riddell's Finances Are Made Subject of Enquiry at Hearing.

Norwich, Ont., June 25.—At 12.15 yesterday morning, the coroner's jury enquiring into the death of the wife of Roy Riddell, veterinary surgeon, returned the following verdict:

"That Orena Riddell came to her death from prussic acid poisoning, same having been either taken by mistake or administered by some party or parties unknown to the jury."

Coroner Ellis seemed reluctant to accept the decision.

"Er—well, gentlemen, this is practically a disagreement," he said, "because evidently some of you think that parties unknown are responsible and some think it was a mistake."

"No, I don't think there's any disagreement," objected a juryman.

W. S. Brewster, M.P.P., who appeared as counsel for Riddell, agreed that the verdict was quite proper, but it was not until he had telephoned Crown Attorney Ball and was reassured, that the coroner accepted it. The crowded court-room evinced sincere satisfaction.

Indeed, Riddell made a most favorable impression. His counsel appeared largely to offset the rumors that he was in financial straits, and the evidence went to show that, on the contrary, Riddell was in good shape financially, thus crushing the theorizing that an insurance policy on his wife could have been a motive for causing her death. Riddell sat close to his lawyer and prompted him constantly. He seemed in good spirits, and as though he had no cause for fear.

In opening the session, the second since the enquiry began, the coroner read a report from Provincial Analyst Ellis, that he had found 7-10 of a grain of hydrocyanic acid in the stomach of the dead woman, equal to 35 grains of the diluted acid.

Dr. Riddell was put on the stand, and his counsel wanted to explain the state of his finances for him, but the crown would not hear of it. Explaining the life policy, Riddell was under the impression it was made payable to his wife until this investigation started. Witness could not account for his actions from 9 o'clock to 9.15 on the night of the tragedy. He had talked to Mr. Hartzell and went straight home.

He knew of no one who bore enmity to his wife. He felt pretty certain there was no prussic acid in his possession at time in question. If there was, it could still be found in the house. He used it at times to destroy animals, and had ordered as much as three one-ounce bottles at a time of Shield's preparation.

Dr. Riddell explained as minutely as his memory could recall, his financial standing. His house cost him $1,500, towards which he paid $500, and there was no back interest. It was worth $1,600 now. He paid E. Stover $4,400 for a farm, stock and all, and paid $500 in cash, which he had collected from his earnings. He did not owe a cent on his furniture, and there were no liens.

Constable James Entwhistle, who made a search with County Constable Hobson, testified to finding three full prussic acid bottles and one empty in Dr. Riddell's office after the tragedy, also one full, one partly filled and an empty one in the woodshed of the house, and three empty outside of the house, on Monday last.

FISHERIES DISPUTE

London, June 24.—Continuing his argument on behalf of the United States before The Hague Fisheries Tribunal, former Senator Turner outlined the negotiations preceding the treaty of 1818, and pointed out that the treaty was almost entirely conformable to the draft presented by the American negotiators, and the contents of the treaty implied that the American's right to fish was already existing in 1893, and was maintained in perpetuity by that treaty, and that the United States had not renounced its fishing rights in all the bays in the British possessions, but only in territorial waters.

With respect to the regularization of the fisheries, he held that the United States should regulate the fisheries by a common agreement with Great Britain and should have a share in the enforcement of such regulations.

Great Britain had no right to limit American fishermen with regard to the time or manner of fishing, he maintained.

WILL BE TRIED FOR PERJURY

Bryson, June 24.—Judge Weir, who is presiding over the court which is trying Annie Murphy on a charge of abetting her husband, Michael Murphy, in the murder of young Howes and Dale, committed Murphy to stand trial on a charge of perjury.

This is the result of Murphy having of late sworn that he did not do the shooting.

Most of the day was taken up hearing Murphy's evidence. He swore he did not do the shooting, and though severely cross-examined, stuck to his story.

CHARLTON IS CAUGHT

New York Youth Admits Italian Trunk Murder.

New York, June 24.—The Lake Como murder mystery is solved, Porter Charlton, an American youth of good family, is sought by the police of two continents, was arrested in Hoboken, N.J., shortly before noon yesterday, as he stepped from the North German Lloyd liner Princess Irene. In less than an hour he had confessed without tremor, that in a fit of temper, he had beaten his wife into insensibility with a mallet, jammed her body into trunk and sunk it in the Italian Lake.

She was Mary Scott Castle of San Francisco, a woman sixteen years his senior, divorced wife of Neville H. Castle, a San Francisco lawyer.

Charlton is only 21, and a son of Judge Paul Charlton, law officer of the bureau of insular affairs at Washington, and a classmate of President Taft at Yale. The boy married Mrs. Castle in Wilmington, Del., last spring over his parents' protests. Ill-mated, and both erratic of temperament, they sailed for Italy for their honeymoon. Murder brought it to an end, and her body was found in the lake by fishermen on June 10.

Fleeing from Italy under an assumed name, almost penniless and shabby of dress, Charlton on landing ran straight into the arms of Capt. Henry Harrison Scott, U.S.A., the murdered wife's brother. He was taken to police headquarters at Hoboken, where, after a pitiable collapse, so spasmodic that produced extreme nausea, he regained his composure and unflinchingly signed the confession. Last night he is in the Hoboken jail, pending settlement of the complicated problem of extradition brought by his arrest.

DECORATION DAY

To keep one's grave green is pleasant, but to strew flowers on the resting place of the dead is graceful, indeed. It is human to wish to be not forgotten and to desire remembrance in the minds of those whom we have associated. Flowers are emblems of joy and sympathy. The wildflowers in the bush, the sunflower, hiding some ugly shed, grow as unselfishly as the rose in the rich man's lawn. Yet, there are the flowers of kindness and civility, the flowers borne of the golden rule, that do not wither, and warmed and treated by pleasant memory, live on, growing more beautiful with the passing of the years. Flowers on the grave are beautiful, kindly thought and actions are divine.

THE JUNE BRIDE

A big social event took place in Guelph on Wednesday morning, when two daughters of the richest man in town were wedded. Toronto florists turned the church into a bower of beauty, and no expense was spared to make the affair a social feature and a success. The parties concerned are to be congratulated. But the ordinary people in life, who have little money to spare, are to be pitied as they strive to make a splurge at the wedding. Why don't they save their money for the rainy day that sooner or later visits every home. Wedding invitations, too, are often issued and sent to those who would far sooner not receive them. They are glad the sender is going to be wedded, but their gladness is not always to the extent of cheerfully sending a present. They do send one, but it is under a quiet protest, known to no one but the possessor of the unwilling pocket-book.

THE PRINTER

To-morrow a comparatively small body of men, who occupy a very important position in the world, will holiday at Cobourg with their children, their wives, sweethearts and friends. The men in question are the printers of Peterborough.

Judges may sit in dignity upon the bench and give decisions affecting a community or a nation. Remove the printer, and no one knows about it. The moulders are a fine body of men; they pound sand and run molten metal into the flasks. The printers are a necessary adjunct to the enlightening of the public, and the moulding of the opinion of the nation. Has Mrs. Brown gone away? The printer makes it possible for the woman at home to know it. Has a great discovery been made to revolutionize some branch of the world's industry? Thank the printer. Is there an excursion, is there a wedding, does death come to a king, or fire burn up half a town, or tornado wipe out a village? Is there anything happening anywhere, thank the printer, who makes it possible for the world to know. And while eulogizing the printer, we must not forget the devil, from whose ranks have risen many a judge, many a senator, and many a millionaire. May the sun shine on the printers and the printers' devils to-morrow.

AN EPOCH

Wednesday, June 22nd, 1910, will be remembered as the commencement of an epoch in the world's history. On this date the first mid-air passenger boat commenced work on a commercial basis. Man is marvelous. He looks at a waterfall, thinks a while and runs a street railway, lights his house, or turns the wheels in his factory by the magic of its power. He thinks again and the ocean is explored by the submarine. He looks to the skies and flies as a bird. When the first steamer plied the Hudson, men wondered, when the first locomotive went by, the country side was stirred. When the phonograph, the motion pictures came, people once more wondered. Now man has conquered the air, our complex life will be more complex. It requires no vivid imagination to picture aerial ships crossing our great lakes, and even the Atlantic itself, indeed a commencement has been made on a craft for this very purpose. Mid-air sailing will, of necessity, need a code of rules, and when this new system of transportation progresses, the price per fly will probably be in reach of the moderate purse.

A mid-air trip between Toronto and Montreal, will one of these days be an accomplished fact, and the day will certainly come when every principal civilized city of the world will have its stations the same as the railway and boat companies.

Our sons and our daughters will treat airship flying without wonder.

But what a chance for the suicide and what a poor chance for the fellow, the person on whom the suicide falls!

THE FIGHT

It will be a fight to a finish. The pugilists have trained for a long time, the squared circle has been erected, the ropes are taut the resin is on the floor, and the crowd is in the arena. Every seat is taken. The seats in the dim distance have gone for $10. The points of vantage at the ring side have gone for $50. The moving picture machines are ready. Both fighters are in the pink of shape.

The papers have had long accounts of their movements, of the size of their biceps, of their length of arm, and leg, of their height and weight. Their pictures, one-half page size, stand out in the sporting columns.

"I am confident that there will be a new champion," writes one over his printed signature.

"I am sure of victory," says the other.

The purse is a fortune. Seventy-five per cent. will go to the winner.

The hour of battle approaches, and the announcer calls off the names of the seconds as they clamber up to view and bow their acknowledgements. There is a further stir. The audience cranes its neck. Out from the rooms in the distance come the gladiators, attired in bath-robes, their trainers preeding them. The men are greeted with thunderous cheers, with shrieks and whistles. Clambering over the ropes, they enter the ring and shake hands. The crowd howl their admiration again.

The announcer steps out and waves his hand. There is silence, and in a moment he gives the conditions and names of principals and trainers. There is an aspiring champion who challenges the winner, and his defi is announced amid cheers and laughter.

The trainers are giving their last instructions. They are getting their towels and syphons and bottles ready. They are giving their last rubs to the men whose muscles stand out like whipcords. The men are trained to the minute. They are both eager.

A gong rings. The fighters shake hands and square away. Biff! It was countered. Bang! It was blocked. There is skill here and good square fighting. The gong rings. The men drop to their corners smiling, and the crowd yell. The gong again. They are mixing things up livelier this time. One blow has landed fair, and the claret is dropping. But the one who bleeds does not mind it. He blocks with his right and puts out his left on his opponent's eye. The optic commences to puff up. The gong, a rest, and then the gong again. There is no danger. It is skill, sir—skill for a fortune, and all that the championship means.

Ah, ha! a streak shot out and one man staggers and topples to the floor. Like a pendulum above him, the waving arm of the referee ticks off the seconds—one, two, three. There is a movement; the man, rising, staggers to his feet. The gong rings. It saves him.

They go once more. Again a lithe arm shoots out. There is a quiet over that vast amphitheatre, all eyes are on a falling fighter; down he topples. Again the referee's arm goes like a pendulum, and they hear his voice—"One, two, [illegible] seconds of the prostrate warrior watch him for the slightest sign of movement, the seconds of the man who placed him there are watching also; the fighter stands above him waiting, the ringside seats are watching, the distant seats are watching, the sporting writers are watching, the wires strung into the building halt their tickling to break the story of the fight and rush the decision. "Four, five, six"—the referee is counting. The quiet is intense; men are rising to cheer. Seven, eight, nine"—the great room is loud with shouts—there is pandemonium. "Ten." It's over.

The world will know in half an hour. There is a new champion. Five seconds later the gladiator rises and the winner shakes his hand. They are still friends. The winner is a man, the hero of the hour.

• • • • • • • •

The scene changes. What is this? Two nations are stripped for conflict. Listen to the cannon; hear the explosions; see the vessels sink; behold the sparks fly upward! They fight for a stake, for land and the supremacy. They feed the fishes of the deep with bodies and the carrion of the plain with flesh. War, with all its ghastliness, is on. The white light of the press is arranged; the camera of the war correspondent is focussed. The nations of the earth have bought all the seats and are looking.

"Time!"

"Hurrah for the Japs!" cheered when Russia was defeated. cheered.

Bethel-Emily, June 24.—The Sunday school anniversary service held here on Sunday evening, June 12th was very largely attended and Rev. Mr. Burns, of Omemee, delivered an interesting illustrated address on Sunday school work. Also a report of the school for the year 1909, and the history of the Sunday school since its organization, was given by the secretary, Mr. M. Ruth. The following Tuesday, June 14, the annual picnic of the Sabbath school was held and was known as one of the best ever held at Bethel. The afternoon was spent in swinging and amusements, etc., for the children. A sumptuous supper was partaken of at 5 o'clockk, after which the programme of sports for the evening were made known. The first on the programme was the assemblage of all on the lawn of the church, where the young men of Bethel presented the pastor, Rev. Mr. Griffith, who will be leaving this month, with an address and well-filled purse. The address was read by Mr. Ira Switzer and the gift presented by Mr. G. Mills, on behalf of the young men. During Mr. Griffith's sojourn here he made for himself numerous friends and his departure is felt with much regret. The remainder of the evening was spent in races, football [illegible] other amusements that made the day one of great pleasure.

Brief!

Among other notable persons who celebrated their natal day last month was the Earl of Amherst, who is seventy-four years of age. The owner of about 8,000 acres, Lord Amherst was at one time a captain in the Coldstream Guards, and has seen service in the Crimean war. He was educated at Eton, and since 1898 has been Pro-Grandmaster English Freemasons. The inevitable story concerns a young lawyer who was perambulating the courts with an air of scarcely being able to find time to do anything—when his boy tracked him down in one of the corridors. "Oh, sir!" said the boy, "there is a man at your office with a brief, sir." "What, a brief! Great heavens!" And the young fellow began to run through the passages as fast as he could for fear the prey should escape him. "Don't hurry, sir," cried the boy. "I've locked him in!"

Served In Fourteen Capitals.

Beginning his career as an attache at Paris in 1858, the Right Hon. Sir Charles Stewart Scott forged steadily ahead until, in 1893, he became British ambassador at Copenhagen, and thence to St. Petersburg in 1898. He entered the diplomatic service as a youth of twenty, and has served during his career in fourteen capitals. Sir Charles is an Irishman, and received his education at Trinity College, Dublin, where he was well liked among his fellows as a jovial, good-natured companion.

The Mystery of The Yellow Room

By GASTON LEROUX

COPYRIGHT, 1908, By BRENTANO'S.

"If we can't hear we may at least try to see," said Rouletabille.

And, making a sign to me to deaden the sound of my steps, he led me across the path to the trunk of a tall beech tree, the white bole of which was visible in the darkness. This tree grew exactly in front of the window in which we were so much interested, its lower branches being on a level with the first floor of the chateau. From the height of those branches one might certainly see what was passing in Mlle. Stangerson's chamber. Evidently that was what Rouletabille thought, for, enjoining me to remain hidden, he clasped the trunk with his vigorous arms and climbed up. I soon lost sight of him amid the branches, and then followed a deep silence.

In front of me the open window remained lighted, and I saw no shadow move across it. I listened, and presently from above me these words reached my ears:

"After you!"

"After you, pray!"

Somebody was overhead, speaking—exchanging courtesies. What was my astonishment to see on the slippery column of the tree two human forms appear and quietly slip down to the ground. Rouletabille had mounted alone and had returned with another.

"Good evening, M. Sainclair!"

It was Frederic Larsan. The detective had already occupied the post of observation when my young friend had thought to reach it alone. Neither noticed my astonishment. I explained that to myself by the fact that they must have been witnesses of some tender and despairing scene between Mlle. Stangerson, lying in her bed, and M. Darzac on his knees by her pillow. I guessed that each had drawn different conclusions from what they had seen. It was easy to see that the scene had strongly impressed Rouletabille in favor of M. Robert Darzac, while to Larsan it showed nothing but consummate hypocrisy acted with finished art by Mlle. Stangerson's fiance.

As we reached the park gate Larsan stopped us.

"My cane!" he cried. "I left it near the tree."

He left us, saying he would rejoin us presently.

"Have you noticed Frederic Larsan's cane?" asked the young reporter as soon as we were alone. "It is quite a new one, which I have never seen him use before. He seems to take great care of it—it never leaves him. One would think he was afraid it might fall into the hands of strangers. I never saw it before today. Where did he find it? It isn't natural that a man who had never before used a walking stick should the day after the Glandier crime never move a step without one. On the day of our arrival at the chateau, as soon as he saw us, he put his watch in his pocket and picked up his cane from the ground, a proceeding to which I was perhaps wrong not to attach some importance."

We were now out of the park. Rouletabille had dropped into silence. His thoughts were certainly still occupied with Frederic Larsan's new cane. I had proof of that when, as we came near to Epinay, he said:

"Frederic Larsan arrived at the Glandier before me. He began his inquiry before me. He has had time to find out things about which I know nothing. Where did he find that cane?" Then he added: "It is probable that his suspicion—more than that, his reasoning—has led him to lay his hand on something tangible. Has this cane anything to do with it? Where the deuce could he have found it?"

As I had to wait twenty minutes for the train at Epinay, we entered a cabaret. Almost immediately the door opened, and Frederic Larsan made his appearance, brandishing his famous cane.

"I found it," he said laughingly.

The three of us seated ourselves at a table. Rouletabille never took his eyes off the cane. He was so absorbed that he did not notice a sign Larsan made to a railway employee, a young man with a chin decorated by a tiny blond and ill kept beard. On the sign the young man rose, paid for his drink, bowed and went out. I should not myself have attached any importance to the circumstance if it had not been recalled to my mind some months later by the reappearance of the man with the beard at one of the most tragic moments of this case. I then learned that the youth was one of Larsan's assistants and had been charged by him to watch the going and coming of travelers at the station of Epinay-sur-Orge. Larsan neglected nothing in any case on which he was engaged.

I turned my eyes again on Rouletabille.

"Ah, M. Fred," he said, "when did you begin to use a walking stick? I have always seen you walking with your hands in your pockets!"

"It is a present," replied the detective.

"Recent?" insisted Rouletabille.

"No; it was given to me in London."

"Ah, yes, I remember—you have just come from London. May I look at it?"

"Oh, certainly!"

Fred passed the cane to Rouletabille. It was a large yellow bamboo with a crutch handle and ornamented with a gold ring.

Rouletabille, after examining it minutely, returned it to Larsan, with a bantering expression on his face, saying:

"You were given a French cane in London."

"Possibly," said Fred imperturbably.

"Read the mark there in tiny letters—'Cassette, 6a, Opera.'"

"Cannot English people buy canes in Paris?"

When Rouletabille had seen me into the train he said:

"You'll remember the address?"

"Yes: 'Cassette, 6a, Opera.' Rely on me. You shall have word tomorrow morning."

That evening on reaching Paris I saw M. Cassette, dealer in walking sticks and unbrellas, and wrote to my friend:

A man unmistakably answering to the decription of M. Robert Darzac—same height, slightly stooping, putty colored overcoat, bowler hat—purchased a cane similar to the one in which we are interested on the evening of the crime about 8 o'clock. M. Cassette had not sold another such cane during the last two years. Fred's cane is new. It is quite clear that it's the same cane. Fred did not buy it, since he was in London. Like you, I think that he found it somewhere near M. Robert Darzac. But if, as you suppose, the murderer was in the yellow room for five or even six hours and the crime was not committed until toward midnight the purchase of this cane proves an incontestable alibi for Darzac.

CHAPTER XIII.

"The Presbytery Has Lost Nothing of Its Charm Nor the Garden Its Brightness."

A WEEK after the occurrence of the events I have just recounted—on the 2d of November, to be exact—I received at my home in Paris the following telegraphic message:

Come to the Glandier by the earliest train. Bring revolvers. Friendly greetings. ROULETABILLE.

I had not heard from him for a week, nor of the progress made with that mysterious case, except by the innumerable paragraphs in the newspapers and by the very brief notes of Rouletabille in the Epoque. Those notes had divulged the fact that traces of human blood had been found on the mutton bone as well as fresh traces of the blood of Mlle. Stangerson. The old stains belonged to other crimes, probably dating years back.

It may be easily imagined that the crime engaged the attention of the press throughout the world. No crime known had more absorbed the minds of people. It appeared to me, however, that the judicial inquiry was making but very little progress, and I should have been very glad if, on the receipt of my friend's invitation to rejoin him at the Glandier, the dispatch had not contained the words, "Bring revolvers."

That puzzled me greatly. Rouletabille telegraphing for revolvers meant that there might be occasion to use them. Now, I confess it without shame, I am not a hero. But here was a friend evidently in danger calling on me to go to his aid. I did not hesitate long, and after assuring myself that the only revolver I possessed was properly loaded I hurried toward the Orleans station. On the way I remembered that Rouletabille had asked for two revolvers. I therefore entered a gunsmith's shop and bought an excellent weapon for my friend.

I had hoped to find him at the station at Epinay, but he was not there. However, a cab was waiting for me, and I was soon at the Glandier. Nobody was at the gate, and it was only on the threshold of the chateau that I met the young man. He saluted me with a friendly gesture and threw his arms about me, inquiring warmly as to the state of my health.

When we were in the little sitting room of which I have spoken Rouletabille made me sit down.

"It's going badly," he said.

"What's going badly?" I asked.

"Everything."

He came nearer to me and whispered:

"Frederic Larsan is working with might and main against Darzac."

This did not astonish me. I had seen the poor show Mlle. Stangerson's fiance had made at the time of the examination of the footprints. However, I immediately asked:

"What about that cane?"

"It is still in the hands of Frederic Larsan. He never lets go of it."

"But doesn't it prove the alibi for M. Darzac?"

"Not at all. Gently questioned by me, Darzac denied having on that evening or on any other purchased a cane at Cassette's. However," said Rouletabille, "I'll not swear to anything. M. Darzac has such strange fits of silence that one does not know exactly what to think of what he says."

"To Frederic Larsan this cane must mean a piece of very damaging evidence. But in what way? The time when it was bought shows it could not have been in the murderer's possession."

"The time doesn't worry Larsan. He is not obliged to adopt my theory, which assumes that the murderer got into the yellow room between 5 and 6 o'clock. There's nothing to prevent him assuming that the murderer got in between 10 and 11 o'clock at night. At that hour M. and Mlle. Stangerson, assisted by Daddy Jacques, were engaged in making an interesting chemical experiment in the part of the laboratory taken up by the furnaces. Larsan says, unlikely as that may seem, that the murderer may have slipped behind them. He has already got the examining magistrate to listen to him. When one looks closely into it the reasoning is absurd, seeing that the 'intimate'—if there is one—must have known that the professor would shortly leave the pavilion and that the 'friend' had only to put off operating till after the professor's departure. Why should he have risked crossing the laboratory while the professor was in it? And then when he had got into the yellow room—

"There are many points to be cleared up before Larsan's theory can be admitted. I shan't waste my time over it, for my theory won't allow me to occupy myself with mere imagination. Only, as I am obliged for the moment to keep silent, and Larsan sometimes talks, he may finish by coming out openly against M. Darzac if I'm not there," added the young reporter proudly, "for there are surface evidences against Darzac much more convincing than the cane which remain incomprehensible to me, all the more so as Larsan does not in the least hesitate to let Darzac see him with it. I understand many things in Larsan's theory, but I can't make anything of that cane."

"Is he still at the chateau?"

"Yes. He hardly ever quits it. He sleeps there, as I do, at the request of M. Stangerson, who has done for him what M. Robert Darzac has done for me. In spite of the accusation made by Larsan that M. Stangerson knows who the murderer is, he yet affords him every facility for arriving at the truth, just as Darzac is doing for me."

"But you are convinced of Darzac's innocence?"

"At one time I did believe in the possibility of his guilt. That was when we arrived here for the first time. The time has come for me to tell you what has passed between M. Darzac and myself."

Here Rouletabille interrupted himself and asked me if I had brought the revolvers. I showed him them. Having examined both, he pronounced them excellent and handed them back to me.

"Shall we have any use for them?" I asked.

"No doubt; this evening. We shall pass the night here if that won't tire you?"

"On the contrary," I said, with an expression that made Rouletabille laugh.

"No, no," he said. "This is no time for laughing. You remember the phrase which was the 'open sesame' of this chateau full of mystery?"

"Yes," I said, "perfectly. 'The presbytery has lost nothing of its charm nor the garden its brightness.' It was the phrase which you found on the half burned piece of paper among the ashes in the laboratory."

"Yes. At the bottom of the paper, where the flame had not reached, was this date, 23d of October. Remember this date; it is highly important. I am now going to tell you about that curious phrase. On the evening before the crime—that is to say, on the 23d—M. and Mlle. Stangerson were at a reception at the Elysee. I know that, because I was there on duty, having to interview one of the servants of the Academy of Philadelphia who was being feted there. I had never before seen either M. or Mlle. Stangerson. I was seated in the room which precedes the Salon des Ambassadeurs, and, tired of being jostled by so many noble personages, I had fallen into a vague reverie, when I scented near me the perfume of the lady in black.

To be Continued.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

The Review does not hold itself responsible for opinions expressed by its correspondents

To the Editor of the Review.

Sir,—I have read with interest the editorials in the Toronto Star and Review regarding University and higher education, and may I make a few remarks?

The old German wisdom in mechanical things at the middle of the last century was wisdom of professors. It was thorough and exact, but the professors had no contact with the needs of practical life, and American and English papers mocked about the fact that Germany had a whole load of mechanical schools, but that neither teachers nor students would be able to drive a nail. And at that time they were right.

To-day the whole mechanical world is learning in Germany and from Germany. Immense quantities of organizing power have been used to develop the German Technical College so far as it is now, and the young graduate starts in his profession today with excellent knowledge.

Already the preparation for college in a German high school is of realistic tendency and gives much knowledge in mathematical and natural sciences.

After the high school graduation, the student who intends to go to a technical colledge first, has to serve at least one year as workman in the machine shop, blacksmith shop or foundry of a good factory, but by far most of them take two years.

That practical activity in a factory shows to the young men the different ways how to do any job, how to use tools and machines, has to give him the first impression and conception about economical manufacturing and management.

But more than that, it has to show him the social needs of workmen and what he at best is able to do, and brings him near to the understanding of these men, whom he may have to handle later.

This is practical education for good reasons, very highly estimated in all techincal circles in Germany.

The lectures in the college are to [illegible] that spirit which [illegible] man brings with him from the factory.

In particular the teached theories will be explained by experiments in the excellent laboratories, which every college has.

Aside of that the German colleges make plain to its students the business habits of their profession with the German social laws, and the legislation of commerce, with social, politic and national economy.

After that education the young man is not a stranger at all in his calling or profession when he takes his first position.

By all these experiences he has his understanding sharpened so as to be able to bring out new ideas and to carry out them, and so to contribute to the steady and sure progressing of German engineering art.

When our Canadian commissioners go to Germany to study the ways of German technical education they go to visit the school equipments, laboratories, and the professors, and also some manufacturers and factories, but they may overlook one mighty factor of importance in the development of German technical schools. That is the Society of German Engineers. The German colleges owe very many good ideas and suggestions to this society, which watches very carefully their further development, always showing new problems and its richer prosperity is always for the progress of German technical colleges. And may it be allowed to ask here: Where are the Canadian Societies of Mechanics, Hydraulics and Electricity Engineers? The development of our societies is necessary to the improvement of our technical education.

I have the honor to be,

Yours sincerely.

A RECENTLY ARRIVED GERMAN MECHANICAL ENGINEER.

To the Editor of the Review.

Sir,—We hear and read a great deal about the evil effect sensational literature has on boys. Stories about "Dare Devil Dick" or "Happy Jim," who fare forth in search of adventure are denounced loudly by many good people. I am not going to question the soundness of such views. I know boys are born imitators, that they are hero [illegible], that they often have unholy longings for excitement and adventure which sometimes finds outward expression and causes the pious people about them to hold up their hands in holy horror and exclaim "that boy will come to some bad end." If this be so, what result can we expect from the hysterical outburst of misplaced sympathy we have had from pulpit, lawyer and morbidly sensitive public this week, culminating as it all did yesterday in a flower garlanded grave; to be gazed at by hundreds of our small boys. If "Dare Devil Dick" be a hero to the young reader, what to-day must his conclusion be about Robert Henderson? "Only a boy," but what about the boy in the home, and on the street? He, too, is "only a boy"—keenly sensitive to the breath of public sentiment, his conclusions taking color from what he hears and sees. What conclusions will he be likely to gather from the [illegible] repeated "only a boy" argument, and the flower garlanded grave? Then, if it be true "we live in deeds not years," is the "only a boy" argument sound? One cannot but conclude it is not a sound argument. The aged victim living her simple life of everyday duty and virtue seems more akin to the childlikeness and wholesomeness which associate with youth.

Then, too, is it not a pity that the morbid, ill-regulated sympathy which always exists in a community should have been given such an opportunity to display itself, by the placing of the body in our cemetery on Decoration Day? That flower-heaped grave will only too surely encourage the spirit of lawlessness. Self-will and impatience of control, which is already so prevalent, does all seem like tearing down without sufficient reason, what parents, teachers and preachers are constantly trying to build up in our boys and girls, true conceptions of what is right and what is wrong.

Yours,

ELIZ. KENDREY.

Two well-known local young men had an unexpected dip in the Otonabee on Tuesday evening.

Both were experienced canoeists, which makes the fact more strange, and they are desirous that their names should not become known.

This is the second accident of this nature on the Otonabee this season, and it is to be hoped no deaths will be recorded now that the boating season is in full swing.

THREE MONTHS IN JAIL FOR THEFT OF PAIR OF BOOTS

For the theft of a pair of boots which cost the owner $2.50, a young man, seventeen-years of age, was sentenced to the county jail for a term of three months, by Magistrate Dumble, at the police court this morning.

The prisoner smiled, on hearing the judgment of the court.

The boots were stolen from the county jail on Wednesday, June 15, while the owner was at work about the buildings. The theft was not discovered until quitting time, and later the prisoner was seen wearing the boots.

The prisoner's story of the affair was that on the Friday following he met a stranger from Tweed, and a bottle of whiskey was purchased early in the morning. Each had an equal share, and after wandering around the streets and having had a meal in the Dominion Chinese Cafe, prisoner said "that on arriving home he had the boots." To the best of his knowledge, he bought them at Jay's second-hand store for 85 cents.

Two witnesses from the store stated that no such sale had been made. Another witness who saw the prisoner near the jail, stated that he had noticed something in each of the youth's hip pockets. He did not know what it was.

In answer to this, prisoner said that the articles were two beer bottles, which he was about to return.

His Worship told the prisoner that his explanation of the affair was not satisfactory, and he would have decided in his favor had he not gone in the witness box and stated that he gots the boots at Jays, when the fact of the matter was that he did not.

SYSTEM OF GARBAGE REMOVAL FOR CITY IS SUGGESTED

It has been suggested that a scavenger system be employed in Peterborough in connection with the Health Department.

The duties of the scavenger would be to call at the city residences at different times, and remove the garbage that is too frequently thrown out into lanes and yards to decay and breed disease germs.

The system works to excellent advantage in other places, where it is used, and it would seem that it would be a good move to introduce it into Peterborough.

WHAT NAME STRIKES YOU BEST FOR THE NEW BRIDGE?

The false work on the new Smith street bridge is completed, and the cement work will be commenced very shortly. The contractors, Messrs. Conroy Bros., have carried out their work in a commendably thorough manner, every detail of the construction having been painstakingly and skilfully attended to.

The question now is, what will the new bridge be called? The Smith Street Bridge is the name that the old bridge has been known by, but that name is hardly representative or high-sounding enough for the handsome new one.

It has been suggested to the Review that the bridge be named after some representative citizen who has been distinguished for his good offices on Peterborough's behalf. Mrs. Nicholl's name is one that immediately suggests itself in this respect, but there is Nicholl's Park and Nicholl's Hospital, and the name of another benefactor of Peterborough would seem appropriate in the choice of the title to go on the name-plate of the bridge.

The bridge is one of the finest of its kind in the province, and will be an imposing and useful structure.

What name strikes you as being the most fitting?

You are respectfully requested to send your selection to the editor of the Review.

THE DEPARTED BRETHERN'S GRAVES WERE DECORATED

By I. O. O. F. Yesterday—Little Lake Cemetery Beautified Yesterday Afternoon—The Address of the Clergymen.

Long will the memory Decoration Day, June 23rd, 1910, linger in the minds of those bereaved ones, who yesterday embraced the opportunity specially set apart for them, of beautifying the last resting places of their departed.

The occasion was the annual ceremony inaugurated by the Peterborough Lodge Independent Order of Oddfellows for this purpose, and hundreds of citizens streamed in and out of the cemetery gates from early in the morning till late at night.

Beautiful weather conditions favored the decorating operations, and the bright sunshine and multitudinous variety of floral creations combined to give the grounds a beauty appearance.

Shortly after three o'clock the members of the local Oddfellows fraternal society preceded by the 57th Regiment band left their rooms and marched to the cemetery.

Each man carried a bouquet.

Arriving there they halted in front of the chapel, and formed a circle standing with bared heads while the band played several familiar sacred airs. A couple of local clergymen who were in the assembly with others then made brief prayers, after which the Oddfellows proceeded to decorate the graves.

Lieut.-Colonel Miller was in charge of the proceedings.

THE GRAVES DECORATED.

The following is a list of the graves decorated;—Sheriff Hall, S. Aibro, W. Gilbert, Richard Kingdon, W. H. Wrighton, Wm. Hall, Robert Rowe, John H. Cameron, D. Baillie, James Hamilton, Dr. Wm. Bell, Arthur Rutherford G. Rubidge, A. Baptie, W. C. Downer, D. Breeze, Nathan Nicholls, Steven Roadhouse, W. H. J. Vizard, C. Beauchere, W. S. Conger, John Reed, Dr. McNab, James McKim, S. White, A. Wilson, J. W. Doxsee, Dr. Allen, Andrew Tully, J. Eastland, Dr. H. Bennett, C. A. White, F. Foote, A. McCallum, F. Logan, J. A. McDonald, A. Sawers, D. Carlisle, W. Beale, Jas. Bird, J. Swanton, John E. Parsons, John W. Armstrong, Jas. W. Crossley, W. Mogse, L. E. Gillespie, Robt. Smith, John Fanning, Jos. Phillips, Chevalier W. Smith, Jas. McWilliams, Walter J. Roberts, John Frances, Thos. Connal, Col. McDonald, Fred Rubidge, Geo. Jenkins, F. Ferguson, Jas. Ferguson, Geo. McBurney, W. H. Scott, Jas. Foley, D. Sim, Wm. Galley, J. Martin, T. H. J. Buckett, A. Mooney, T. H. Foster, Geo. Milne, John Milne, J. Robinson, J. L. Hughes, Judge G. B. Hall, T. Fortye, C. Perry, W. Rombough, E. Chamberlain, Jas. Harvey, Chas. Beauchere, G. I. Roszel, Mr. McGregor.

THE ADDRESSES.

A platform had been erected in the central part of the cemetery and several of the local clergymen occupied chairs on it. Mr. Wm. Hill acted as chairman and called first on Rev. Robt. Pogue for a short address. Mr. Pogue said, in part;

It is a beautiful custom which we have of visiting the graves of our loved ones who are gone, and strewing flowers upon them, beautiful because it is Christian.

It reminded him of another custom; that of the Lord's Supper.

It was the desire of the Saviour that He should not be forgotten. There should be nothing mysterious about it.

People had assembled there because of their love for the departed. Amid the pressure of life's duties we were sometimes apt to forget those who had gone before, and it is on such a day as this that we recall them to our memory.

We desire to perpetuate their memory in our hearts. So long as God blesses us with a mind we can remember them, and the ones indeed are poor who are not permitted to remember some dear departed friend. Love never dies. The presence of the dead is with the bereaved ever.

It is by ministering to the wants of the living that we can make life cheerful.

If the departed were permitted to look down upon us on earth, after having viewed life from on high, they would regard it in a totally different light than before.

Mr. Pogue's closing words were, "Be true to God and forget not the death."

REV. W. C. RIDDIFORD.

Rev. W. C. Riddiford was the next speaker.

I am glad, said Mr. Riddiford, that after all, we have a refuge on this earth. As we gather here with this society, it is indeed a pleasure to us all to be allowed to commemorate the memory of the dead.

Some heart responds to the sympathy shown here to-day, some mother is glad to be allowed to think that her child who is gone, is not forgotten by others.

Amid the silent tombs of God's acre we can stand strong with God's aid amid grief and pain.

"I am glad," said the speaker, "of this society at whose instigation we have met. It reminds us of the immortality of the soul, and I am glad of the principle of brotherhood expressed here to-day.

"I know what it is," he continued, "that links our hearts to the great world above, and appreciate such a society that comes out so clearly for good.

"Fraternity will not be for a time, but will last forever."

REV. J. G. BROWN.

Rev. J. G. Brown was the next and concluding speaker.

Among other things Mr. Brown said:—"Our gathering here this afternoon is a simple expression that the lives of our departed comrades are not and will not be forgotten.

"To often we leave our expressions of love to each other until it is too late. We are accustomed to the separation of this life, but not of eternal separations. We all very gladly remember the kind associations of the friends who did us good while here on earth, and we entwine their names in our memory with garlands of fragrant affection.

"We should all endeavor to leave behind us when our sojourn on earth ends, a good name and a good character.

We all have been given the privilege of meeting our loved ones in heaven, if we will only accept it. Our lives should end in glory, and when we reach the heavenly mansions prepared above, we shall all have the same inheritance and maintain one great unbroken family."

More About Chimes

Much has been said lately about chimes, the possession of same no doubt bringing our city up into line with the best. Canon Spragge also sends word to the effect that any interested may ascend the tower of St. Peter's church.

CITY LEAGUE DOUBLE HEADER FOR TO-MORROW

Look out for a barrel of excitement at Riverside Park to-morrow afternoon. The regular weekly City League double header will be put on, the first game between the Strathconas and Park Street being called at two o'clock sharp. The southeners have a dark horse for the initial bag, and the team in the cellar hangout will go one better and serve up several new ones. Bill Shaw is being carried on the injured list, but Manager Metheral claims to have a monopoly on garden trotters, and will hand out a surprise package.

At four o'clock the big attraction will be put on. The West Ends will stack up against the Abstainers. It will be the second meeting, and something is going to happen. Both nines are rather shaky regarding the outcome, and at a distance it looks like some classy ball.

ALL STARS AND T.A.S. TO MEET ON THE HOLIDAY

The fans and fanettes will have another opportunity of witnessing a game between the All Stars and the T.A.S., when the two teams come together for the second time at Riverside Park on the holiday, July 1st.

The executive of the league some time ago decided on a game for Dominion Day, and as a large number of the league supporters have stated that they would like to see the two teams again in action, it has been decided to put on the contest.

Mike O'Brien will likely be in the city before that date, and such being the case, he will, in all probability, work at the first bag.

The All Stars' lineup will be practically the same as that which proved a winner on the occasion of the benefit game.

FINAL GAME FOR MIDLAND LEAGUE CHAMPIONSHIP

Bowmanville and the C.G.E. play at Nicholls Oval to-morrow for the Midland League championship.

The teams played a tie game last Saturday in Bowmanville, the score being 2—2.

Both teams are playing football of the first order, and the game should attract an exceptionally big crowd.

Time will be called at 2 o'clock.

YW.C.A. NOTES.

Quite a few back events were run off last night in the Stratton Cup athletic contest and a big shake up took place in the standing. The half mile run was a very fast and pretty race between Smith and Willis, and was won by Willis in the good time of 2.05 seconds. Smith was a good second and Sanderson third. Sanderson ran a great race for a new man and will improve a lot.

The standing by points;—
Hill, 478 1-2.
Smith, 406 1-2.
Willis 376 1-2.
Flowers, 369.
McCarrol, 290.
Sanderson, 283.
Taylor, 279 1-2.

MILITARY NOTES

INFANTRY.

No. 4 Company of the 45th Regiment Lindsay, returned home from Barriefield at noon to-day, after having been twelve days in camp there.

Lieutenant Henry, was in charge of the bunch, and reported having spent an enjoyable time.

Every member is bronzed and healthy looking, and the twelve days of roughing it, seems to have added very much to their soldier-like appearance.

CAVALRY.

The Third Prince of Wales Dragoons are also home from Petawawa. About sixty men and fifty-five horses composed the contingent from this district, in charge of Lieutenant Clarry.

There were about 4,000 men assembled at Petawawa this year altogether.

The boys arrived in the city on the C.P.R. this morning.

ARTILLERY.

The 24th Field Battery, with Major Young in charge, and numbering about seventy-five strong, left for Petawawa last night.

They will be in camp two weeks.

SOME CONTRASTS IN MILK YIELDS

Some records are always stimulating. Some of the records from members of the Cow Testing Associations for May are indicative of good cows well kept and well fed ,in a word, decidedly profitable cows. For instance, one dairyman in Western Ontario, owning a herd of 62 cows, has the inspiring record of 1,127 lbs. of milk per cow during the month. Again ,in six associations in Peterborough and Oxford counties, the average yield of 380 cows was 1,055 lbs. of milk, and 34.3 lbs. fat.

The reverse of the picture is not so rosy ,indicating the need of more and better cows. Several associations have an average of under 700 lbs. of milk and 26 lbs. fat. A group of 75 cows at one creamery gave only 604 lbs. of milk and 21.8 lbs. fat in May. Think of the difference the average yield noted above is seventy per cent. better.

As an instance of what is being done by the selected animal the record of one of the most famous cows to-day forms a wonderful contrast. She is credited with 120 lbs. fat in thirty days. This cow, it is said, was picked up from a neighbor who did not keep records ,and therefore was unaware of her phenomenal value. Who will be the next man to discover another such diamond in the rough? Individual cow records alone can show where such jewels exist.

Signs of Life

Hamilton Herald.

These strenuous battles in the church courts between the supporters of historical criticism and the adherents of traditionalism are not to be deplored. They are the birth-throes of a new theological era. They are the natural and inevitable accompaniments of a period of transition in religious belief. They are signs of life, and as such are to be welcomed. Far better are they than spiritual stagnation and indifference. And, after all, the questions at issue are not of supreme importance, they do not touch the fundamentals of religious faith. With regard to these all the disputants are agreed. The vital question at issue is whether truth is to be followed, whithersoever it may lead, or whether scientific criticism is to be checked and choked when it interprets ancient truths in a new way which cannot be reconciled with the traditional interpretations.

FIGHTING A CROCODILE.

An Exciting Adventure In a Chinese Timber Camp.

A chance visitor to a Chinese timber camp has related in Chamber's Journal an extraordinary adventure with a crocodile, in which the crocodile came very near having the best of it: "Arriving in my boat at the little jetty or landing place, I was astonished to find Graham, the white man in charge of the camp, lying on a rattan couch within a few yards of the bank, with a heavy express rifle across his knees, gazing intently at a rough fence erected in the stream.

"Throwing myself down near him in the welcome shade, I learned the following story:

"Two nights before Graham was sleeping peacefully in his little palm leaf house in a clearing about twenty yards from the river bank, when his dog began to growl. Graham turned out and walked round the hut to ascertain the cause of the disturbance, but, seeing nothing, addressed himself to the dog in his usual vigorous sailing ship language and retired to bed again.

"Five minutes later he was once more aroused by a yelp from the dog, and this time, really annoyed, he seized a stick and sallied forth to inflict punishment on the disturber of his dreams. Suddenly a dark form glided swiftly from the shadows, and Graham felt himself seized by the right knee as in a vise. Stooping to free himself, he found he was in the grip of a large crocodile, whose teeth were firmly embedded in the flesh.

"Backward and forward the struggle swayed, the crocodile striving to pull its destined victim to the water's edge and Graham, hampered as he was by his imprisoned leg, fighting for his life to reach higher ground. At last the beast, hurling its victim to the ground with a shake of its powerful head, began to drag him swiftly toward the water.

"Poor Graham, feeling, as he expressed it, that it was 'all over bar the shouting,' determined to make one last effort for his life, and, taking advantage of a momentary halt as the brute was steering past a tree stump, he sat up and succeeded in getting both his thumbs into the reptile's eye sockets—the only vulnerable part of a crocodile's head.

"The rest of the story is perhaps best told in Graham's own words, or as nearly as circumstances will permit:

" 'As soon as I gets my thumbs made fast in 'is eyes, 'e opens 'is mouth to shout an' lets go my leg. Then first thing next mornin' the coolies lays 'is breakfast for 'im, as you see, an' I gets into this chair an' 'ere I stays, if it's a month.'

"Vainly I tried to persuade him to come away with me to the next station and see a doctor. I argued with him, I implored him, but it was absolutely useless. He refused to move from that chair till he had bagged his crocodile, and I was at last obliged to leave him, having dressed his leg and exhausted every known means of persuasion short of brute force.

"I met him again a week later in a hospital bed, suffering severely, but quite happy in the knowledge that the bones of that crocodile were bleaching in the sun outside his house."

Books of the Old Testament.

The Great Jehovah speaks to us
In Genesis and Exodus;
Leviticus and Numbers see,
Followed by Deuteronomy;
Joshua and Judges sway the land,
Ruth gleans a sheaf with trembling hand;
Samuel, and numerous Kings appear,
The Chronicles we wondering hear;
Ezra and Nehemiah, now
Esther, the beauteous mourner, show;
Job speaks in sighs, David in Psalms,
The Proverbs teach to scatter alms;
Ecclesiastes now comes along,
And the sweet Song of Solomon;
Isaiah, Jeremiah then
With Lamentations takes his pen;
Ezekiel, Daniel, Hosea's lyres
Swell. Joel, Amos, Obadiah's
Next, Jonah, Micah, Nahum come
And lofty Habakkuk finds room,
While Zephariah builds the walls,
And Malachi; with garments rent,
Concludes the ancient Testament.

The Certainty of Fate.

The Mohammedans have a fable which they repeat to illustrate the certainty of fate.

A sultan was once asked by his favorite, the grand vizier, for permission to leave at once for Smyrna, although a brilliant court fete was then in progress. Upon being asked his reason for such haste the vizier replied:

"Because I just saw the angel of death yonder in the crowd. He looked at me so earnestly that I know he has come for me. I wish to escape him."

"Go! Go at once!" said the sultan, who then beckoned to the angel and asked why thel atter had looked so earnestly at the vizier.

"I was wondering," replied the angel of death, "why he was here, for I have orders to kill him in Smyrna."

A Stroke of Business.

A writer who was very intimate with Frank R. Stockton says that when the Stockton family lived in Bucks County, Pa., Frank and his brother had a dog which they trained solely to hunt cats. The brothers were overhauled one day by a farmer whose cat they were chasing. To placate the farmer they gave him a dollar for a pig, which they took home. By driving away their father's pigs at feeding time they soon made their own the fattest pig in the pen and sold him a a profit of $7. Frank R. Stockton always considered the deal a tribute to his business acumen.

Meyerbeer and Thunder.

Meyerbeer, like Handel, composed best in a thunderstorm. He had a room made at the top of his house with glass roof and sides, so that he might enjoy these conditions to the full whenever they presented themselves. It is said that no beast of the field, no raven or nightjar, could scent the approach of a storm more unerringly than Meyerbeer, and nothing was allowed to interfere with his solitary enjoyment of it when it arrived. Wherever he was he would leave at the first premonitory rumble.

SUMMER SKIN TROUBLES

Sunburn, blistering and irritation are the commonest form of summer skin troubles, and Zam-Buk ends these very quickly. It works in two ways. As soon as applied, its antiseptic powers get to work and kill all the poison in a wound, a sting or a sore. This generally ends the smarting and pain. Then Zam-Buk begins the healing process, and fresh healthy tissue is built up. For sore, blistered feet, sore hands, heat rashes, baby's heat spots, sore places due to perspiration, etc., you can't equal Zam-Buk.

Also unqualied for cuts, ulcers, abscesses, piles, and all inflamed and diseased conditions of skin and subjacent tissue. Druggists and stores everywhere sell Zam-Buk, price 50c. box, but you are warned against accepting any of the harmful imitations.

BIG HARVEST OF STRAWBERRIES

Present indications point towards a big harvest of strawberries, and the fine weather will, it is said, bring the supply on with a rush. Whether the price will be affected to any noticeable degree is largely problematical, but it would appear that the situation calls for a reasonable price.

Milady's Mirror

The girl who from motives of economy or convenience prefers to do her own shampooing will save herself much time and weariness if she invests in several appliances used by professionals.

One of these is a spray with a long rubber tubing and fine nozzle. This can be bought to fasten to any spigot and is a great convenience in rinsing the hair. It is almost impossible to get the hair entirely clean by oneself. With the greatest care, some of the soap or shampoo mixture will cling unless forced out by the strong current of a spray.

Another convenience is an electrical drier. These can be found in a number of different styles—some that can be attached to any electric fixture in the house, others that are not dependent upon an electrically lighted room, but have their own storage batteries.

Where the hair is heavy enough time is saved in drying to more than make the drier an advisable purchase. Where one is sensitive to draft and usually catches cold after a shampoo the drier is invaluable, as the current of air can be regulated to any desired temperature. The shorter time that damp hair hangs around shoulders is also a preventive of colds.

A drier that sends the current out into the room is better for the hair than those on which the hair rests to dry.

The Falling Hair of Convalescents.

When hair falls after a fever or other weakening disease it is for the reason that the parts near the roots have undergone decay. It is always a mistake to arrest any such fall. One should rather try to quicken it and so give the roots a chance of sending out new, healthy hair. Free combing, brushing and scalp massaging will soon get rid of the diseased hair. When the patient's strength allows the head must be washed and rinsed. Now comes the time for nourishing and stimulating the growth. If money is not very scarce it is intense folly to sacrifice utility to economy. In these cases one should always make an effort to purchase the best things obtainable, preparations ordered to meet the special needs of the patient. However, some excellent results have followed this simple treatment: Make a mixture of tincture of capsicum, ten parts; liquefied phenol, four parts; glycerin, ten parts, and water to complete the hundred parts. Shake and repeat the shaking before pouring out. Apply a dessertspoonful daily, thoroughly combing the hair both before and after the application. After treating the hair thus during seven days use the lotion only four times weekly and on the other days apply a small quantity of oil of rosemary mixed with three times its bulk of olive oil. As the weeks go by lessen the frequency of the capsicum mixture and weaken the rosemary mixture by adding more olive oil.

To Make Arms Pretty.

Girls whose arms are not round and smooth should begin at once to use a bath brush, for there is no doubt that constant daily application of such a toilet article scatters many a group of pimples and other skin disfigurements, while it stimulates circulation and clears the skin.

After scrubbing the arms with a bath brush and any pure soap for a week the roughness should disappear. The unevenness of the flesh is simply old skin that a cloth is too smooth to remove. But when there is irritation, such as sometimes appears on the face, more treatment will be needed.

Before using the formula about to be given the skin should be brushed with green soap, washing it off and drying carefully afterward. Then apply the ointment made from one dram of sublimed sulphur, five drops of oil of eucaplyptus and one ounce each of ointment of oxide of zinc and ointment of rosewater. These should be smoothly blended. This mixture should be put on daily or at night. Twice a week only should scrubbing with green soap be given. The bath brush is to be used daily, however, with simple soap.

Finger Nails.

The nails should be cared for every day. If you follow this practice it will take but a few minutes at any one time. Soak your nails in warm water in which there is a little tincture of benzoin or aromatic vinegar. Lather them well with soap and then file the ends to the same shape as the little half moon at the base. Trim off all rough edges. Press the skin away from the half moon so that it will show distinctly. This ought to be done with the towel every time you wash your hands. Do not use a nail file for this purpose, but an orange wood stick. After the nails are shaped by this treatment at both ends polish them with a chamois polisher, being careful not to heat them by too brisk rubbing. Before polishing you may rub a little vaseline or olive oil on them, with a little nail powder dusted over. This will give a high polish which will last longer than the simple friction with the chamois. Be careful to wash the powder all of. The finishing touch is given by rubbing with a plain chamois.

DESOLATION AND DEATH

REIGN IN ST. PIERRE, THE CITY OF 40,000 DEAD.

Roofless Houses and Cavernous Windows Strike Terror to the Hearts of Sightseers—Vegetation Now Covering Many Ruins—It Was the Wickedest Spot In the Whole West Indies—Only One Man Escaped.

"It is men, not walls, that make a city," the Greek maxim ran, and more, it is living men, writes a correspondent of The London Times. For the walls of St. Pierre are there still, and probably no fewer than 40,000 of its inhabitants are there also. But they have been asleep these eight years now. And it is extraordinarily impressive, this white, sightless skeleton of a dead city.

In orderly rows the houses stand as seen from the sea, the streets rising in tier upon well graded tier back from the shore to the hills. But every street is silent, every house roofless, every window cavernous and blind.

Before us as we land lies the wide paved street which runs along the parallel to the waterfront. "And there," says the ship's officer who is my guide and counsellor, "was the wickedest spot in the whole West Indies. That row of houses, pink and white, to the left. The French nature, you know, away from the restraints of home, with the ignorance and docility of the blacks. It is a bad combination."

There are legends now of blasphemous rites which were in progress when the "fire from the Lord out of heaven" was rained down — legends which have probably grown up since the event. But there seems to have been good ground for that description, "the wickedest spot in the West Indies." And of over 40,000 people who were presumably in the city at the time only one man escaped, prisoner under sentence of death for murder confined in a cell impervious to the flames and fumes, and he only escaped to die of the shock a few days later.

Fifty yards of a narrow cross street bring us to what was once the chief business thoroughfare of St. Pierre. Wide and straight it runs for a mile in either direction, the roadway flagged with blocks of stone, fair and smooth, to where on each side the gutters are now green ribbons of herbage. Then the high curb rises, and beyond it the broad paved sidewalk (for the French build their colonial cities better than we) reaches to the straight, clean, orderly frontage of the stone built shops. Straight and orderly the line of the shop fronts still stands—the fronts only, with gaping doorways and empty windows.

Here and there, still fixed in the heavy masonry, the rusted clamps and pins show where doors were hung and window shutters fastened, but beyond the bare incombustible stone and metal not a fragment or shred of wood or glass or fabric remains of all the bravery of what was once perhaps the gayest and most fashionable shopping street in the West Indies. Now and again one gathers indications of what kind of stock was carried in this shop or that.

Here a mass of what was once coiled chain, now fused to a solid lump of metal, suggests that this was an ironmonger's. There the wreckage of a massive safe inside the wide windows, framed for display, makes it likely that a jeweler throve. But for the most part each building is full, choked to the roof, with ash and volcanic dust, dreadful to see, but merciful perhaps, for under it, buried deep, are things that one does not care to think of. No life, no perishable material survived that first strifling, withering blast, then came the rain of dust and ashes, covering all things as for the most part they remain hidden to this day.

And more mercifully yet nature in the tropics is prolific. Whatever man holds he holds only by keeping the vegetable armies at bay; wherever he retreats the ranks of the green things advance. From the hill slopes on all sides vegetation has pushed its way among the ruins. Seeds have been borne by the winds or dropepd by birds, or having long lain dormant in crevices of houses and in the uncongenial earth of the city, have now thrust up through the overlying layer of debris to the air. In every interstice, overhanging every wall from where the roofs once were, a mantle of foliage and blossoming shrubs has been drawn over the whole dead city.

Each straight paved street, with the white walls on either hand, is little more than a pergola, a grotto, an avenue cut through the green.

In the cemetery the tombstones lie split by the heat and twisted from their beds, and the monuments lie strewn broken on the ground, but it has little meaning now, this place where the resting places of a few hundred dead were honored with monuments of marble and granite, while all around in the city which is one vast cemetery lie 40,000 dead unmarked.

My ship's officer told me that he knew St. Pierre well before it was stricken, and no less than once a year since then he has been able to put in here and come ashore, and at each visit he has seen how nature has gained upon the town. In a few more years the streets will all be overgrown, the masonry buried in green and the forest growth will have pushed its way down to the shore.

This is one of the islands where the dread snake, the Fer de Lance, is found. In just such a broken wilderness as this, where under the flowers and the butterflies the wreckage of the city offers strange dark hiding places, it will love to make its home. Then few people will care to push their way through the thick growth among the ruins. Ships will content themselves with passing off shore, and passengers will be shown from a distance the place where once St. Pierre stood. But a little more and a generation will arise to which the story of the disaster is but a tradition, and the very site of the wickedest spot in the West Indies will be forgotten, its memory overgrown with myth and legend, even as the ruins of the city itself are already half submerged in flowers and green leaves.

A gamekeeper going his rounds on Campsie estate on May 10th, discovered a pheasant's nest with 26 eggs.

A New Baby.

A New Baby! What magic, what mystery, what charm these words have for us. Yet, how infinitely more they mean to the mother. A new life; short, to be sure, but full of possibilities. Some one must be patient, hopeful, watchful, proud and never discouraged. That "some one" is the mother. She has heard her baby's first cry, and whether it be her first or tenth, the feeling is the same. Her feeble arms are out-stretched; those arms that will never desert it as long as the mother shall live. And that hand which supports the head of the new-born babe, the mother's hand, supports the civilization of the world.

Is it any wonder, we ask you, mothers, that with all these responsibilities resting upon your all too weak shoulders, we urge upon you the necessity of selecting the babe's medicine with utmost care; the necessity of protecting your babe from worthless, unknown and narcotic drugs as you would protect it from the fire?

These Directions Should Be Kept Handy—They May Save Life.

It makes one shudder to think of the grim sign on the druggists' vials, but the shudder is worse when one of the family, perhaps a favorite child, has swallowed some deadly dose. What is done then must be done quickly. The following plain directions ought to be kept handy. They may save a life while the doctor is coming.

When the poison is unknown this is the treatment: Provoke repeated vomiting, give bland liquids, stimulate if necessary.

For Acids.—Sulphuric, nitric, muriatic, oxalic: Give an alkali; provoke vomiting, give bland fluids, secure rest, stimulate if necessary.

Alkalis.—Hartshorn, soda, potash, lye: Give an acid (vinegar), provoke vomiting, give bland liquids, secure rest, stimulate if necessary.

For Arsenic.—Paris green, Scheele's green: Provoke vomiting, give dialyzed iron and salt (repeat several times), give dose of castor oil, secure rest, stimulate if necessary.

For Sugar of Lead.—Give epsom salts, provoke vomiting (repeat several times), give bland liquids, give dose of castor oil.

For Corrosive Sublimate.—Tartar emetic, provoke vomiting, give strong tea without milk (repeat several times), give raw eggs and milk, give dose of castor oil, stimulate if necessary.

For Phosphorus.—Provoke vomiting, give five grain doses of sulphate of copper, give dose of magnesia, but no oil.

Lunar Costic (nitrate of silver).—Give strong salt and water, provoke vomiting (repeat many times).

Iodine.—Provoke vomiting, give starch and water, give bland fluids.

Opium.—Morphine, laudanum, paregoric, chloral, etc.: Provoke vomiting repeatedly, give strong coffee without milk, keep up the breathing.

Strychnine.—Provoke vomiting once or twice, give a purgative, secure absolute quiet.

Aconite.—Provoke vomiting, stimulate well.

Alcohol.—Provoke vomiting, give hartshorn and water.

To provoke vomiting warm water may be used with or without ground mustard (a tablespoonful to a pint of water) or ipecac (a teaspoonful of the powder or a tablespoonful or so of the sirup) and thrusting a finger down the throat.

Mr. George Paxman, a well-known figure at former Printers' Picnics, has in no wise lessened his interest, although not working at present with the type-slingers. Mr. Paxman is exhibiting on Saturday afternoon next his Trained Troupe of Rollicking Roosters (first appearance). These birds, eight in number, stand in a row and when gently touched in the right spot with the butt end of a canthook ejaculate sufficient to enable the production of popular pieces. We were privileged to hear a private rehearsal and the waltz "Silvery Moon" played thus was an inspiration for all time. For the hypercritical who may question as to how the half notes are made, we may add that a printer evenly divides letter size paper to get a half note.

BOOK REVIEWS

JOHN SANDERSON THE FIRST.

This is the title of a book which will be found very interesting by every Canadian, as it gives a picture of the earlier days of parts of Ontario especially as seen from the point of view of a Methodist minister. It will be of especial interest to people of this district, as it treats of events and scenes between Napanee and Lindsay and largely of the days when there were no railways between these points and travelling was tedious and rough.

John Sanderson the first was Rev. John Sanderson—known on the minutes of the Conference as "the first" to distinguish him from another Methodist minister of the same name—who occupied pastorates in Peterborough, Durham, Victoria, Prince Edward, Lennox and Hastings counties, and who lived for a number of years in Peterborough, died here and rests in Little Lake cemetery. This biography is written by his daughter, Miss Camilla Sanderson, formerly of Peterborough, whose previous writings have given her a name. This is her most ambitious effort, and in this tribute to her father she has done excellent work. The style is bright, interesting, graphic, and while the work is a biography, she does not confine herself to a record of dates or of events chronologically recorded, but gives an outline of a busy and useful life filled in with descriptions of such scenes and events as will give a vivid view of the times and places referred to, and a clear comprehension of the character and disposition of her earnest, devout, hard-working, sympathetic and joke-loving father, and of his labors in his chosen field. There is not a dull page—no, not a dull paragraph—in this book of over two hundred pages. There is graphic description, humor and pathos, and the difficulties and trials of the Ontario pioneers, and especially of the pioneer Methodist ministers and their families, are told with a faithfulness that gives a clear understanding of what they had to overcome in founding the flourishing and prosperous communities of today.

Names appear throughout the book of many persons who were prominent at that time, or who afterwards became eminent, and very interesting glimpses are given of them. Especially to Peterborough people there are numerous references, and this will make the work still more interesting to people of this city.

The work is a noble tribute to a father and a pioneer clergyman. The publisher, William Briggs, Toronto, has done his work well and the volume is a handsome one bound in green and gold, with a portrait of Mr. Sanderson as a frontispiece, and will be a pretty as well as an interesting addition to any library.

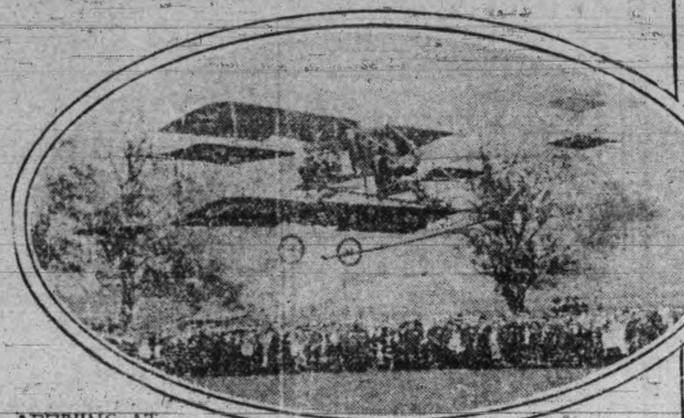
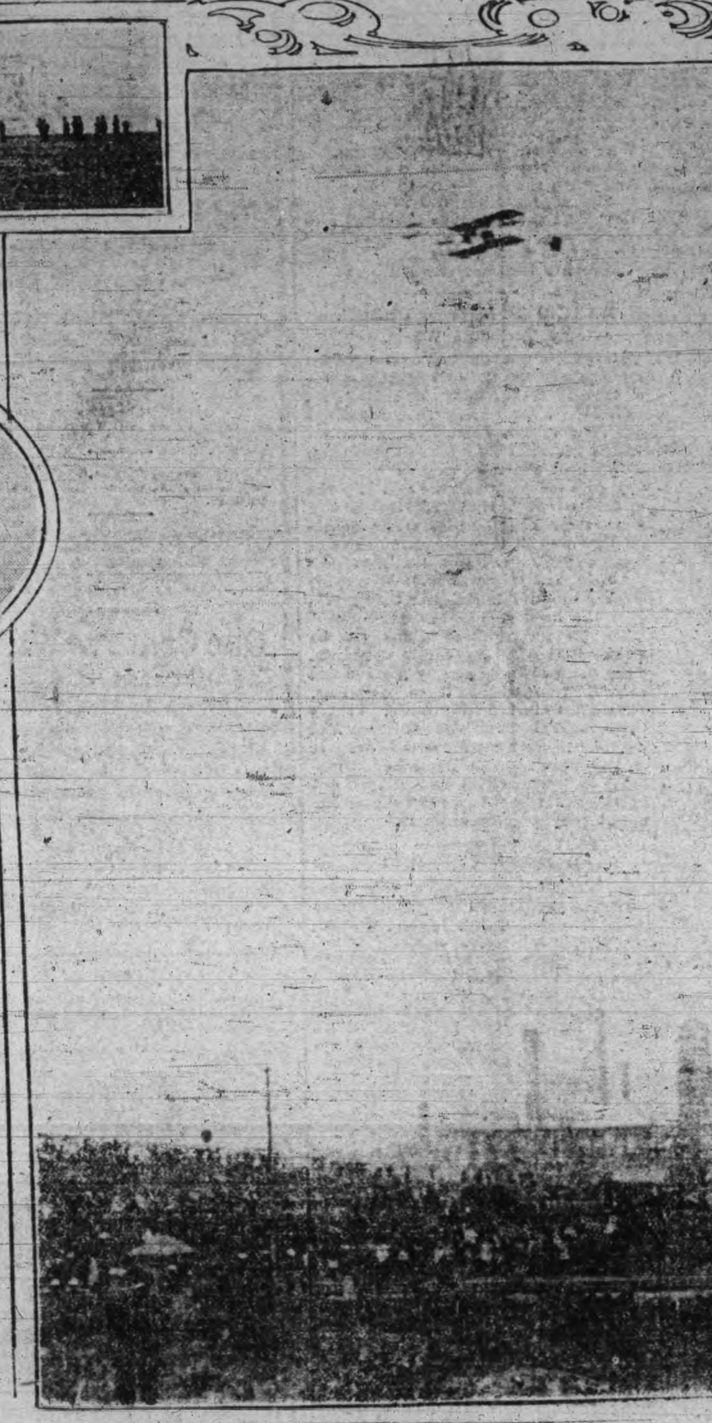
SCENES ATTENDING THE REMARKABLE AEROPLANE FLIGHT MADE BY CHAS. K. HAMILTON, THE FAMOUS AVIATOR

LEAVING GOVERNORS ISLAND



ARRIVING AT PHILADELPHIA



CHARLES K. HAMILTON ARRIVING AT PHILADELPHIA

CHARLES K. HAMILTON DELIVERING GOV. HUGHES MESSAGE TO GOV. STUART OF PENNSYLVANIA

CHARLES K. HAMILTON, JUST AFTER HE ALIGHTED IN PHILADELPHIA

Charles K. Hamilton, the famous aviator, set another mark in aeronautics by making a flight from New York to Philadelphia and return, during the journey on one of which he had to make repairs to his machine in a swamp. It is believed that Mr. Hamilton would have made the journey in record breaking time. During the greater part of the journey Mr. Hamilton outdistanced in speed a fast express train running between New York and Philadelphia.

Other aviators have made longer cross country flights, but never before has an aeroplane taken a railroad's schedule, following the line of steel rails and telegraph wires and flying over cities and villages, wherever the iron road led the way.

In picturesque and popular interest probably the flight never has been equalled in the history of human flight. It was a feat that brought the flying machine to the attention of the world in a new light. It was something that merged fiction into fact.

All along the route, at railroad stations, in the streets, in the highways and in the fields men and women gazed upward in wonder at this new creation of civilization as it swept over their heads, with the railroad train thundering in hot chase.

MILLION DOLLAR GRAFT WAS UNCOVERED BY MR. MURPHY

S. S. Gouldthrite of Government Printing Bureau is Being Sought by Dominion Police Charged With Robbing the Government for Fifteen Years

Ottawa, June 25.—F. S. Gouldthrite, superintendent of stationery in the Government Printing Bureau, is a fugitive from justice. He has been superintendent at the Bureau for twenty years. The Dominion police have instituted a search for him, but he has not been in the city for several days, and it is understood that he has left the country.

There is a serious charge laid against him by Hon. Charles Murphy, Secretary of State, who is in control of the Bureau, namely, that Gouldthrite has been guilty of fraud and graft. Besides Gouldthrite, one official and four employes have been dismissed, and on official suspended pending investigation. Mr. Murphy refused to divulge the names of these men.

Gouldthrite was in charge of the stationery department of the Printing Bureau, and the purchase of all paper and stationery supplies was under his direct supervision. The purchases totalled hundreds of thousands of dollars in the course of a year.

Graft was worked in this way. Supplies were ordered from firms in the United States. The Government paid, in the case of cuts, 25 cents an inch, but only 15 cents an inch found its way to the American firms. The ten cents, it is alleged, went into the pockets of Gouldthrite and his accomplices.

One of the frauds was connected with a stationery article that was introduced some years ago to prevent fraud in all the departments. As the result of the Martineau defalcation some years ago, an order was passed that all Government checks should be printed on a special safety paper. This paper was brought from a certain New York firm for a time. Then the order was subsequently transferred to another New Yorw firm. It has been discovered that this latter firm has been supplying a fictitious safety paper, worth considerably less than the amount for which Gouldthrite has been authorizing payment.

Mr. Murphy made a special trip to New York and Washington lately in connection with this matter. In this case, however, the Government will suffer no loss, as it happens that the same firm has already furnished to the Bureau a large quantity of other supplies which have not yet been paid. The payments will now be withheld until there has been a general readjustment.

In other cases, it is stated the Government has been mulcted to the extent of 40 per cent. It is calculated that Gouldthrite has handled about $700,000 worth of supplies each year, and, it is said that for at least fifteen years he has been working this game. It is estimated that the very least sum he has stolen during these years would be a quarter of a million dollars, but it might be very much more, possibly nearer a million. Exact figures, of course, will never be forthcoming.

Hon. Mr. Murphy stated yesterday that for nearly twelve months he has been conducting an investigation into the affairs of the Printing Bureau. He preferred to make the investigation himself, rather than call for a royal commission of investigation.

It will be remembered, however, that this is one of the departments which the Opposition in Parliament two or three years ago demanded should be investigated. The Government then refused point blank to go any further than to investigate the Marine and Fisheries' Department, in consequence of which, some leading officials came under the ban.

It was stated last night that the Opposition, having had its case proved, that serious malpractices do exist in other Departments, will call for an investigation of the Interior Department, which is alleged to be the rottenest of the Departments of the Government. The loose way in which Gouldthrite spent money is stated to be the cause of suspicion being attached to him.

It should be said in justice to Mr. Murphy [illegible] ernment to probe the scandals in the Departments, which have been common talk here for years, was before he took office.

One rumor is afloat that Gouldthrite has made his escape to Mexico. Another story is that he has committed suicide. His wife, on being questioned, simply replied that he was not at home, and that she did not know when he would be back.

Gouldthrite has not been at the Printing Bureau since Monday, so that he has had plenty of time to get a considerable distance away.

Little Girls Locked In Box Car.

Buffalo, N.Y., June 25.—Chief of Detectives Taylor received a telegram yesterday from the chief of police at Hoboken, N.J., stating that the two little Italian girls who had been strangely missing from their home in Buffalo since last Tuesday afternoon, had been found alive in a box car at Secaucus, N.J., yesterday morning. The children were almost starved, and were almost in a state of unconsciousness. It is probable that the girls went into the car in search of bananas.

Thirty-Seven Killed In Wreck.

Mexico City, June 25.—Thirty-seven persons were killed and as many others injured on the Manzanillo National Railway in the State of Colima. Four cars broke loose from the locomotive and dashed down a steep grade, jumping the track.

2,500 Get an Increase.

Boston, June 25.—Twenty-five hundred employes of the Boston & Maine Railroad were granted an advance in wages, ranging from 5 to 25 cents a day.

Sprung a Sensation.

Cambridge, Mass., June 25.—A further sensation developed yesterday in the extended investigation of the mysterious murder of Clarence F. Glover, a Waltham laundry proprietor last fall.

The Middlesex County Superior Court yesterday issued indictment warrants against Mrs. Lillian M. Glover, widow of the murdered man, and six others, who are charged with being accessories after the fact of Hattie Leblanc, who is accused of murdering the laundryman. It was [illegible] yesterday that in addition to Mrs. Glover, the following persons had been indicted secretly: Samuel Elmer and Alton F. Tupper, Mrs. Glover's counsel in the contest of Glovers's will, Mr. and Mrs. Francis Freeman and Mr. and Mrs. Seymour S. Glover. Seymour Glover was a brother of the murdered man.

C.P.R. Telegraphers Ask Arbitration.

New York, June 25.—The Commercial Telegraphers' Union has applied to the Canadian Government Department of Labor for a board of conciliation and investigation under the Lemieux Act to settle the dispute between the Canadian Pacific and the telegraphers. Six hundred men are involved, scattered over the road between Canso, N.S., and Bamfield, B.C.

The chief obstacle to an agreement was the company's refusal to schedule the offices in the eastern provinces, particularly Montreal and Toronto. The western part of the system has been working on a schedule since 1905.

Cut of Fifty Per Cent.

London, Ont., June 25.—Hydro-Electric power prices for London were announced yesterday afternoon.

For manufacturers the rate will run from $40 to $50 a horse-power per annum, while for house lighting the rate will be 6 1-4 cents, less 20 per cent. discount, per kilowatt.

These rates are 50 per cent. less than those that have been charged by the London Electric Co.

DON'T DECEIVE CHILD

Tell Them Truth About Their Origin, Says A. W. Beall.

Whitby Man, Speaking at the Canadian Conference of Charities and Corrections, Condemns Prudish Practices of Parents — Session Is Brought to a Close With Resolutions on Various Matters.

Guelph, June 25.—"The right knowledge, imparted at the right time, in the right proportion and by the right person, will give the right results in the health education of the boy," declared Mr. A. W. Beall, M.A., of Whitby, the Whit[illegible] health education of the boy, which was the feature of yesterday's closing sessions of the Canadian Conference of Charities and Correction.

Mr. Beall condemned the practice of deceiving children as to the facts of their origin. It was a sin, he declared, to tell a child that he was found under a cabbage leaf in the garden, or that he came down in a rain storm. The speaker looked forward to the day when parents would be so jealous of the purity of their children that they would not allow anyone else to impart to them the sacred truths about their bodies. Then, and then only, would the awful dangers of impurities which face the boy of to-day be dispelled.

"Impress upon your children the sacredness and splendor of the human body, and you need not be afraid of them growing up impure men and women," he declared.

Other addresses were delivered by Rev. B. H. Spence, Toronto, and Dr. Carney, Windsor.

Resolutions of thanks to the retiring president and officers for their work, and to President G. C. Creelman of the Ontario Agricultural College, for his hospitality in entertaining the delegates to tea on the college lawn, where the young ladies of MacDonald Institute waited upon them; another important resolution expressing hearty approval of the prison reform work undertaken by the Ontario Government and the proposed legislation simplifying the conviction and punishment of wife-deserters, were passed.

Soldiers Shoot Valuable Horse.

Kingston, June 25.—A careless soldier who attended Barriefield camp was responsible for the death of a valuable horse owned by George Druce. As the train with the 40th Regiment was pulling out, homeward bound, a shot was fired from a coach and the animal fell dead in a field. Ten years ago a soldier shot at a young man while the train was pulling out.

The title of Mr. Reid's mural decoration is "The Sermon on the Mount." It will be a large canvas, covering 30 by 36 feet, and will be placed in the centre of the church over the baptistery screen.

It is also learned that well-known sculptors will be commissioned to execute sculptural decorations for the facade of the church, covering an expenditure of about $20,000.

COURTS MUST DECIDE HAS TO CHARLTON'S SANITY

Relatives of the Young Man Wanted in Italy for the Lake Como Trunk Tragedy Are Making Strenuous Efforts to Prevent His Extradition to Scene of Crime

New York, June 25.—Porter Charlton cannot be tried for murder in the courts of New Jersey. Whether he beat his wife on the head into insensibility from blows with a wooden mallet at Lake Como, Italy, and then stuffed her, still living, into a trunk and sank the trunk in the waters of the lake, is a matter outside the jurisdiction of the Jersey courts.

But he will not be released until the question of his sanity is determined. This is assured by the Charlton family, who announced last night that if the boy's mind proved dangerously unsound, they would take the initiative in having him committed to some institution. The father, Judge Paul Charlton, had previously said that he believed Porter to be crazy.

The attitude of the Jersey courts, as defined last night by Prosecutor Pierre Garven of Hudson County, is this:

"The State of New Jersey now holds Charlton merely on the complaint of the Italian consul-general as a fugitive from Italian justice, pending a request for his extradition. If extradition is not demanded, there is absolutely no action that the courts of this state can take. Thus there is a possibility that Charlton may walk from jail a free man, for the despatches from Rome seem to indicate that the Italian Government will act in the matter with reluctance, if at all, since to demand extradition to Italy of an American subject who has committed a crime within Italian jurisdiction would imperil a cherished Italian precedent."

Explaining the attitude of the family, R. Floyd Clarke, the lawyer, retained by Judge Charlton, said tonight:

"The wish of the family is to see strict justice alone as between the boy, facts and the public. If there should be no request for extradition Judge Charlton will make application for a commission in lunacy to determine his son's sanity. If the boy is found insane, he will be committed to an institution. If he is found sane—well, that is a matter so far distant as yet that I prefer not to take it up now."

Alienists retained by the family who examined young Charlton yesterday are: Charles L. Dana, professor of nervous diseases in the Cornell Medical School; Edward B. Fisher, Allan McLane Hamilton, prominent in the Thaw trials, and W. J. Arlitz, city physician of Hoboken.

Charlton answered test questions of the alienists from shortly before one o'clock until nearly three. His attitude seemed to be one of total indifference.

THE NEWS AS TOLD IN DESPATCHES

BREACH WIDENS.

The Railroads and Trainmen Are No Nearer Settlement.

Montreal, June 25.—According to a statement made last night by J. H. Murdock, vice-president of the trainmen's organization, there will be no strike vote taken in case the Canadian Pacific Railway turns down the ultimatum sent to the company by the committee that the men must be given everything claimed by them.

The committee, Mr. Murdoch states, is fully authorized to act as circumstances may require, and it will be ready to do so within two days of the announcement of the company's intention.

Yesterday afternoon, Mr. Murdoch said: "This is no letter-writing contest, and that their final word has been said to the C.P.R. when they say they must have standard wages or strike. The same will apply to the G.T.R. to-morrow, as they have not had as much time to discuss the matter."

If a strike is declared on the C.P.R. it will involve less than 4,000 men, according to a rough estimate made by officials yesterday. It was stated that in the eastern portion of the systems, which is the only part affected, there are less than 1,000 conductors. In addition to a conductor, there is a brakeman and a baggageman on each passenger train, and two brakemen on each freight train. This makes a total of less than 3,000 men, to which must be added between 400 and 500 yardmen.

The committee has not yet received the company's reply, but to a press representative yesterday afternoon, General Manager Leonard stated that the company had no intention of going any further than the award of the arbitrators. The company had accepted this, not only where it was unanimous in its findings, but also where the company's representative had declined to sign.

The situation in regard to the Grand Trunk is not so far advanced.

In the letter of rejection, which the Grand Trunk officials received yesterday morning, the men express satisfaction at the efforts of the board towards standardization on the Grand Trunk, but regret that the same effort was not made on the C.P.R. awards. Had it been made, the employes of the latter might not have been compelled to decline to accept the award. Having regard to the fact that the wage rates on the Grand Trunk, as proposed by the board, are very far from the standard desired, the men "respectifully decline" to accept the award. The employes have in the past been especially considerate of the actual and presumed financial inability of the Grank Trunk to pay as much as other lines, but now they feel that it can so. Few, if any, roads can show as satisfactory financial standing, they say, and they believe that in the past employes of the line have not been given a correct estimate of its financial standing.

TRANSIENT RELIGIONS

The more striking the name, very often, the more lax the religion, is a fact that can be often applied to many of the new-fangled bodies that spring up with the hay and disappear with almost equal suddenness.

A press despatch from Halifax states that a party of Holy Ghosts have arrived on board the ship "Kingdom" from Boston.

While in Boston there was a dispute over a female, which was aired in the courts there.

It is regretable that women are so often the dupe of men, and man-made religions.

Not long ago a colony of Flying Rollers was formed at Windsor. There were men rollers, women rollers and high rollers. The men wore long hair prayed long prayers, and were eccentric to a degree. The colony has disbanded, and many a woman high roller, had many a heart ache, many a sorrow with the disillusionment.

PECK'S BAD BOY

Richard Coleman is dead at Boston. The end came on Wednesday. Few have ever heard that name before, but millions have heard of Peck's Bad Boy. Coleman was Peck Jr. Regarding bad boys, many turn out excellent men, while often the boy who never did anything to make his mother worry in his youth never did anything to make her proud in later life. The boy who was a fighter at school usually carries his fighting qualities into business and public life, and is heard from. But the dunce at school is always an uncertain quality. Many indifferent scholars have turned out to be exceedingly different men, and have risen head and shoulders above their school-time playmates, who shone at their studies.

THE GARBAGE QUESTION

It is surprising that a city the importance of Peterborough has no system of garbage collection. Welland, not yet a city by any means, has an excellent refuse collecting department. It would seem that [illegible] should be viewed from a sanitary, rather than a monetary standpoint. Kingston is also bothered with this question, which at this distance seems to have been neglected. The Whig says that $500 only was voted, and that while the results for the money expended were excellent, yet the amount was far too small to ensure good work.

ANTI-TOXIN

A Paris doctor says that he has discovered an anti-typhoid vaccine that will do as good work as the toxin used in diphtheria, That is good news, but the best thing is prevention. A good system of garbage collection, well kept back yards, clean cellars, carefully covered milk, and a war against flies, are a few things better than anti-toxin.

FORCE OF REASON

The Peace Society of the City of New York are on the right track. They are anxious to stop war. They want nothing less than the federation of the 59 nations of the world.

Kant said 115 years ago that there never could be world-wide peace unless the nations of the earth had representative government and a constitution. China, the last nation regarding constitutional government, seems to be waking up and announces that it will shortly give the country a constitution.

Human beings are governed by either force or reason. If one doesn't rule, the other must. Cities are ruled by reason. So are individual nations. When a nation wishes to secure its rights, reason is dropped and force used. Then it is war. The individual could be put in jail or fined if he did that.

What the Peace Society wishes, is not the flimsy, international agreements such as now exist, which no nation is bound to accept. They want an international court, a parliament of men, with a world constitution.

This body and organization, the Peace Society wishes to make it more powerful and binding than the Hague Tribunal or the International Court, which is about to be constituted.

MISDIRECTED ZEAL

The decoration of the grave of Robt. Henderson, the murderer, was misdirected zeal. What of the grave of the aged murdered one? What of the horrible memories to haunt her old age? It is human to be kindly to the murderer whose days are numbered, but to place flowers on the grave of a man who had committed a deliberate murder without provocation, and had slain the hand that had befriended him seems strange indeed. There are little rooms in the city of Peterborough where there are the sick, flowers would be appreciated. There are also homes of the poor where a bouquet would add cheer to dismal surroundings.

THE HUMAN NOSE

Professor William Cleaver Wilson thinks the poet has been neglectful in singing the praises of his loved one. He has sung of her soulful eyes, and silken tresses. Her pearly teeth and ruby lips and dainty feet, he has not forgotten. But what of the damsel's nose? Why has this been overlooked? Can no love-sick youth immortalize himself by a classic on his sweetheart's nose.

AN ELOPEMENT

While Mayor Gaynor, of New York city was cleaning up New York, closing up dives and stopping graft and making people work who never worked before his daughter, aged only 19 was billing and cooing with a New York broker 40 years of age. Then she eloped. This shows that sometimes people can accomplish great things in sweeping out other person's doorsteps and neglect their own. Miss Gaynor's sister also eloped.

No doubt many a woman suffragette is like Mayor Gaynor, while busy with her attempt to regulate the nation she forgets the mildew in the cellar and the cobwebs in the woodshed.

FURS

Even in this hot weather there is talk of an advance in furs. A silver fox was shot out west last spring and sold for over one thousand dollars. Some black fox skins are worth twice that money. One can leave Peterborough, and if he knows the trick he can bag a red fox easily. But they are only worth from three to five dollars.

There are any number of men who handle the pick and shovel, the number is less who show how to work the trowel of the mason or bricklayer, it grows smaller when the electrician steps in, and dwindles down to a very small percentage when it comes to the man who can draw the original plan of a house, the architect.

Price demanded is guaged largely by rarity of accomplishment, and rarity of accomplishment is attained, often, only after years of study and careful practice.

The doctors in Peterborough can be numbered easily. They are few.

All the rest of us are supposed to be densely ignorant on matters of medicine, and we would be fined if we hung out our sign and started to practise. We are not supposed to think when we feel ill, we don't want to think, we call a doctor. If we break a leg it is go for the surgeon in a hurry. So they live in fine houses, and wear fine linen, these specialists on human aches and pains.

We pay them for advice. But there are advisers next door willing to come in free of charge.

There are few lawyers in town. We are not supposed to know the revised codes or laws, either criminal or civil. we are the great uninitiated. Should we be a party of the first part, or a party of the second part, the mortgagor or the mortgagee, should we become willing plaintiff or unwilling defendant, we go to our specialists and our mind is relieved. Of what our pocket is relieved, is a standing joke.

But for years those doctors and lawyers have studied, worked and expended in preparation.

So they charge for the past expense and experience, all because of the knowledge that is enshrined in their dome of thought.

We can get two hundred, yes, five hundred men in Peterborough who can dig a good ditch. But the total number of lawyers and doctors in Peterborough is a very small percentage. And so it goes through life.

To find a fitting railway manager is a ten thousand time harder job than to locate a man with a pick and shovel who can help fix up the railway.

To secure a general bank manager is a far more difficult problem than to get in a junior, who will take drafts in and out for acceptance.

This is the hour of the first-class specialist.

However, if we are not specialists it is not too late to commence.

THE POINT OF VIEW

Christian Guardian.

It is reported that no less than $15,000 has been offered by a baseball manager for a star pitcher. And yet the country preacher at $500 a year would not change place with him, even if he could.

A "CIVILIZED" FASHION.

Toronto Star.

If the women of civilized countries would forego only a few of those ankle gripping gowns in which they are endeavoring to hop about, their sacrifice would make possible the sending of many more missionaries to China to tell the poor heathen about the folly of foot binding.

TALK ABOUT GRAFT!

Toronto Star.

The official ratcatcher and turncock at Buckingham Palace is paid $1,800 per year, and gets a fashionable London residence rent-free. He catches no rats, and his duty of turning the water supply on and off he may easily delegate to someone else. There are many such traditional "offices" in the Old Land which common sense must sooner or later abolish.

DEPORTATION.

St. Thomas Times.

In view of the inhuman deportations of British workmen and their families that the Canadian Government is responsible for the Stratford Herald thinks we should not allow ourselves to grow angry over the means taken by Uncle Sam to show his authority—and his boorishness—at the boundary line. Things are being done today by Canadian officials, which for harshness, stupidity and selfishness have never been surpassed by the acts of United States immigration Officials.

BETTER WORK.

Vancouver Saturday Sunset.

After a silent study of her father's somewhat unprepossessing countenance little Gertrude patted his face, "Father," she said, 'did God make you?" "Yes, dear." 'And did he make me too?" "[illegible] dear." She gazed into the mirror a moment and then looking at her parent again inquired; "Don't you think he's doing better work lately?"

"IT MIGHT HAVE BEEN."

Hamilton Herald.

It is stated that Robert Henderson, the seventeen-year-old murderer who was hanged at Peterborough yesterday, was clever and well educated, could speak and write three languages had travelled extensively in four continents and was well connected in England, his native country. And he met death bravely. What might not this unhappy youth have accomplished if the energy and ability which he utilized for criminal purposes had been the instruments of an honorable ambition!

IRELAND.

A. L. Murphy, in New York Times

Referring to the letter "I" in today's Times asking why Ireland does not get home rule, permit me to suggest that the law of compensation appears to have obtained in the case of the Irish to an unusual extent. Do not the Irish rule every country on the globe? A story recently told by a traveller of worldwide experience may be given as an illustration. This gentleman, while on an extended trip, when passing the coast of Ireland reverently lifted his hat, and offered thanks that he had at last seen one country not ruled by the Irish. It would, therefore, appear that a people so well fitted to rule, since responsibility only gravitates toward those capable of handling it, leave their country not only for their country's good, but for the crying need there is for them in all other countries.

UNANSWERABLE QUESTIONS.

Carolyn Wells.

Why doth the little busy girl
 Pile on her pretty head
A switch, a puff, a bird, a curl
 Of ladies who are dead?
Why doth she then with calm delight
 Perch on the top of that
A most absurd bombastic fright,
 A horror of a hat?
Why doth she hie herself to lunch,
 Study the bill of fare,
And then proceed to buy and munch
 One chocolate eclair?
Why doth she softly murmur no,
 When what she means is yes?
And when she knows it isn't so,
 Why does she acquiesce?
Why does she dance us round in glee
 Like puppets tied to strings?
And yet, in secret, why do we
 Love her for just these things?

MAKING TOWNS TO ORDER.

July Technical World.

It is expected that the next eighteen months will see the culmination of one of the greatest colonization movements in history, for during that time it is schemed to build and populate 220 towns in the Dominion of Canada, an average of one town every other week day in that year and a half. By the middle of 1911, these 220 towns will have their official places and names on the map of Canada, populations of from one hundred to a thousand people each, and they will have been made largely by good American citizens from over the border.

The history of these towns is to be unlike that of any other in existence. They are not to be merely platted and named, and then left to vegetate. They are to be forced into life. That is the remarkable thing about them. And this is neither a guess nor a hope. It is the result of a game of town-building," which has been played out by the government as carefully as one might play a game of chess.

MILITARY TRAINING

The Courier, Toronto.

Military training is a form of education. It is superior to boxing, lacrosse, football or hockey, although the latter have much to commend them. The young man who is a good carsman or footballer or lacrosse player will usually be found in the ranks of the militia during a certain period of his life. The professional sport makes a poor soldier; so does the man who hates physical exertion of any kind, and has no love for the outdoor life.

The growth of cadet corps among our public schools, secondary schools, and private schools and colleges, shows that our educationists are trying to create manly and intelligent citizens, not pedantic weaklings. The gold-medalist who neglects his body during his brilliant college course is buried by his classmates within a year or two of graduation. The prize-men who survive to become leaders in commerce, industry and politics are those who spent regular hours in the gymnasium and on the football field.

Militia training is an advanced form of cadet work. The cadet plays; the militiaman trains with the object of being useful in a possible national emergency. Both receive the benefit of their work in improved physique and higher intelligence. If every young Canadian were trained for twelve days a year for at least three years in the local militia, Canada would have fewer mollycoddles, fewer dissipated fools, fewer slovenly-footed, hang-shouldered, loose-lipped loungers. We would have a more earnest body of citizens, and our national life would be immensely strengthened.

NEARLY LOST FALCONER.

University President Took the Wrong Section of the Train.

President Falconer of Toronto University was banquetted at Winnipeg recently by the graduates of old 'Varsity and was the guest of the Canadian Club at a luncheon. The day the president arrived in Winnipeg, he decided, however, that there must be some mistake in the dates, while the Winnipeg committees in their turn, who had charge of the various functions, were panic-stricken that their guest had not arrived and the caterers were hurriedly called to postpone their preparations. The train got in at noon and the president and the committees spent most of the afternoon endeavoring to locate each other.

In these day of immigration rush to the west the C.P.R. express trains generally travel in several sections. President Falconer arrived on the first section and the committee met the second one. While the committee were securing the C.P.R. depot and the Royal Alexandra Hotel, the doctor, who had given up waiting for a reception committee, was being shaved in the basement. The 'Varsity banquet was that night and a hurried meeting of some of the graduates was called in the office of James Fisher, K.C., chairman of the Alumni association. Until Dr. Falconer could be located, it was decided to call off the banquet. In the meantime a well-known 'Varsity old boy was sent out as a sleuth. "Are you sure Dr. Falconer is not registered?" he asked the Royal Alexandra hotel clerk.

"I am Dr. Falconer," said a man beside him, "and I am glad to find someone looking for me." Then followed elaborate explanations.

"I HONESTLY BELIEVE 'FRUIT-A-TIVES'

The Greatest Cure For Rheumatism In The World"

KNOWLTON, QUE., Oct. 12th. 1909.

"For many years, I suffered from severe Rheumatism, and the attacks were very distressing and prevented me from doing my ordinary work. I tried many remedies and physicians' treatments, but nothing seemed to do me much good, and I was becoming very anxious for fear I would become a permanent cripple from the disease.

I tried "Fruit-a-tives" and this medicine has entirely cured me and I honestly believe it is the greatest Rheumatism cure in the world."

E. E. MILLS.

Such a statement could not be bought from a man like Mr. Mills. He thinks too much of his good name, to sell it or sign it to an untruth. Mr. Mills tried "Fruit-a-tives" after all other treatment failed—and "Fruit-a-tives" cured him of Rheumatism. In the goodness of his heart, he wrote the above letter in order that sufferers in all parts of Canada would know that there is one remedy that actually does cure Rheumatism. This testimonial was entirely unsolicited on our part. We did not know that Mr Mills was taking "Fruit-a-tives" until we received the above letter.

It is a case like Mr. Mills' that proves the marvellous powers of "Fruit-a-tives" in arresting and curing disease. It may be stated, without fear of contradiction, that "Fruit-a-tives" will positively cure Rheumatism when properly used.

"Fruit-a-tives" is the only medicine in the world made of fruit juices and is the greatest Rheumatism cure known to modern science.

50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, or trial box, 25c. Sold by all dealers or sent, postpaid, on receipt of price by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

The Mystery of The Yellow Room

By GASTON LEROUX

COPYRIGHT, 1908, By BRENTANO'S.

"Do you ask me what is the 'perfume of the lady in black?' It must suffice you to know that it is a perfume of which I am very fond, because it was that of a lady who had been very kind to me in my childhood, a lady whom I had always seen dressed in black. The lady who that evening was scented with the perfume of the lady in black was dressed in white. She was wonderfully beautiful. I could not help rising and following her. An old man gave her his arm, and as they passed I heard voices say, 'Professor Stangerson and his daughter.' It was in that way I learned who it was I was following.

"They met M. Robert Darzac, whom I knew by sight. Professor Stangerson, accosted by Mr. Arthur William Rance, one of the American savants, seated himself in the great gallery, and M. Robert Darzac led Mlle. Stangerson into the conservatory. I followed. The weather was very mild that evening. The garden doors were open. Mlle. Stangerson threw a fichu shawl over her shoulders, and I plainly saw that it was she who was begging M. Darzac to go with her into the garden. I continued to follow, interested by the agitation plainly exhibited by the bearing of M. Darzac. They slowly passed along the wall abutting on the Avenue Marigny. I took the central alley, walking parallel with them, and then crossed over for the purpose of getting nearer to them. The night was dark, and the grass deadened the sound of my steps. They had stopped under the vacillating light of a gas jet and appeared to be both bending over a paper held by Mlle. Stangerson, reading something which deeply interested them. I stopped in the darkness and silence.

"Neither of them saw me, and I distinctly heard Mlle. Stangerson repeat as she was refolding the paper, 'The presbytery has lost nothing of its charm nor the garden its brightness.' It was said in a tone at once mocking and despairing and was followed by a burst of such nervous laughter that I think her words will never cease to sound in my ears. But another phrase was uttered by M. Robert Darzac, 'Must I commit a crime, then, to win you?' He was in an extraordinarily agitated state. He took the hand of Mlle. Stangerson and held it for a long time to his lips, and I thought from the movement of his shoulders that he was crying. Then they went away.

"When I returned to the great gallery," continued Rouletabille, "I saw no more of M. Robert Darzac, and I was not to see him again until after the tragedy at the Glandier. Mademoiselle was near Mr. Rance, who was talking with much animation, his eyes during the conversation glowing with a singular brightness. Mlle. Stangerson, I thought, was not even listening to what he was saying, her face expressing perfect indifference. His face was the red face of a drunkard. When M. and Mlle. Stangerson left he went to the bar and remained there. I joined him and rendered him some little service in the midst of the pressing crowd. He thanked me and told me he was returning to America three days later—that is to say, on the 26th, the day after the crime. I talked with him about Philadelphia. He told me he had lived there for five and twenty years and that it was there he had met the illustrious Professor Stangerson and his daughter. He drank a great deal of champaigne, and when I left him he was very nearly drunk.

"Such were my experiences on that evening, and I leave you to imagine what effect the news of the attempted murder of Mlle. Stangerson produced on me—with what force those words pronounced by M. Robert Darzac, 'Must I commit a crime, then, to win you?' recurred to me. It was not this phrase, however, that I repeated to him when we met here at Glandier. The sentence of the presbytery and the bright garden sufficed to open the gate of the chateau. If you ask me if I believe now that M. Darzac is the murderer I must say I do not. I do not think I ever quite thought that. At the time I could not really think seriously of anything, I had so little evidence to go on, but I needed to have at once the proof that he had not been wounded in the hand.

"When we were alone together I told him how I had chanced to overhear a part of his conversation with Mlle. Stangerson in the garden of the Elysee, and when I repeated to him the words, 'Must I commit a crime, then, to win you?' he was greatly troubled, though much less so than he had been by hearing me repeat the phrase about the presbytery. What threw him into a state of real consternation was to learn from me that the day on which he had gone to meet Mlle. Stangerson at the Elysee was the very day on which she had gone to the postoffice for the letter. It was that letter perhaps which ended with the words, 'The presbytery has lost nothing of its charm nor the garden its brightness.' My surmise was confirmed by my finding, if you remember, in the ashes of the laboratory the fragment of paper dated Oct. 23. The letter had been written and withdrawn from the postoffice on the same day.

"There can be no doubt that on returning from the Elysee that night Mlle. Stangerson had tried to destroy that compromising paper. It was in vain that M. Darzac denied that that letter had anything whatever to do with the crime. I told him that in an affair so filled with mystery as this he had no right to hide this letter; that I was persuaded it was of considerable importance that the desperate tone in which Mlle. Stangerson had pronounced the phrase; that his own tears and the threat of a crime which he had professed after the letter was read—all these facts tended to leave no room for me to doubt. M. Darzac became more and more agitated, and I determined to take advantage of the effect I had produced on him. 'You were on the point of being married, monsieur,' I said negligently and without looking at him, 'and suddenly your marriage becomes impossible because of the writer of that letter—because as soon as his letter was read you spoke of the necessity for a crime to win Mlle. Stangerson. Therefore there is some one between you and her—some one who is preventing your marriage with her; some one who has attempted to kill her so that she should not be able to marry.' And I concluded, with these words: 'Now, monsieur, you have only to tell me in confidence the name of the murderer.' The words I had uttered must have struck him ominously, for when I turned my eyes on him I saw that his face was haggard, the perspiration standing on his forehead and terror showing in his eyes.

"'Monsieur,' he said to me, 'I am going to ask of you something which may appear insane, but in exchange for which I place my life in your hands. You must not tell the magistrates of what you saw and heard in the garden of the Elysee; neither to them nor to anybody. I swear to you that I am innocent, and I know, I feel, that you believe me, but I would rather be taken for the guilty man than see justice go astray on that phrase, "The presbytery has lost nothing of its charm nor the garden its brightness." The judges must know nothing about that phrase. All this matter is in your hands. Monsieur, I leave it there, but forget the evening at the Elysee. A hundred other roads are open to you in your search for the criminal. I will open them for you myself. I will help you. Will you take up your quarters here? You may remain here to do as you please. Eat, sleep here, watch my actions, the actions of all here. You shall be master of the Glandier, monsieur, but forget the evening at the Elysee.'"

Rouletabille here paused to take breath. I now understood what had appeared so unexplainable in the demeanor of M. Robert Darzac toward my friend and the facility with which the young reporter had been able to install himself on the scene of the crime.

"Everything seems to be pointing against him," continued my friend, "and the situation is becoming exceedingly grave. M. Darzac appears not to mind it much, but in that he is wrong. I was interested only in the health of Mlle. Stangerson, which was daily improving, when something occurred that is even more mysterious than—than the mystery of the yellow room."

"Impossible!" I cried. "What could be more mysterious than that?"

"Let us first go back to M. Robert Darzac," said Rouletabille, calming me. "I have said that everything seems to be pointing against him. The marks of the neat boots found by Frederic Larsan appear to be really the footprints of Mlle. Stangerson's fiance. The marks made by the bicycle may have been made by his bicycle. He had usually left it at the chateau. Why did he take it to Paris on that particular occasion? Was it because he was not going to return again to the chateau? Was it because, owing to the breaking off of his marriage, his relations with the Stangersons were to cease? All who are interested in the matter affirm that those relations were to continue unchanged.

"Frederic Larsan, however, believes that all intercourse was at an end. From the day when M. Darzac accompanied Mlle. Stangerson to the department store until the day after the crime he had not been at the Glandier. Remember that Mlle. Stangerson lost her reticule containing the key with the brass head while she was in his company. From that day to the evening at the Elysee the Sarbonne professor and Mlle. Stangerson did not see one another, but they may have written to each other. Mlle. Stangerson went to the postoffice to get a letter which Larsan says was written by Robert Darzac, for, knowing nothing of what had passed at the Elysee, Larsan believes that it was M. Darzac himself who stole the reticule and the key with the design of forcing her consent by getting possession of the precious papers of her father—papers which he would have restored to him on condition that the marriage engagement was to be fulfilled.

"All that would have been a very doubtful and almost absurd hypothesis, as Larsan admitted to me, but for another and much graver circumstance. In the first place, here is something which I have not been able to explain—M. Darzac had himself on the 24th gone to the postoffice to ask for the letter which mademoiselle had called for and received on the previous evening. The description of the man who made application tallies in every respect with the appearance of M. Darzac, who in answer to the questions put to him by the examining magistrate denies that he went to the postoffice. Now, even admitting that the letter was written by him, which I do not believe, he knew that Mlle. Stangerson had received it since he had seen it in her hands in the garden at the Elysee. It could not have been he, then, who had gone to the postoffice the day after the 24th to ask for a letter which he knew was no longer there.

"To me it appears clear that somebody strongly resembling him stole Mlle. Stangerson's reticule and in that letter had demanded of her something which she had not sent him. He must have been surprised at the failure of his demand; hence his application at the postoffice, to learn whether his letter had been delivered to the person to whom it had been addressed. Finding that it had been claimed, he had become furious. What had he demanded? Nobody but Mlle. Stangerson knows. Then on the day following it is reported that she has been attacked during the night, and the next day I discovered that the professor had at the same time been robbed by means of the key referred to in the poste restante letter. It would seem, then, that the man who went to the postoffice to inquire for the letter must have been the murderer. All these arguments Larsan applies against M. Darzac. You may be sure that the examining magistrate, Larsan and myself have done our best to get from the postoffice precise details relative to the singular personage who applied there on the 24th of October. But nothing has been learned. We don't know where he came from or where he went. Beyond the description which makes him resemble M. Darzac we know nothing.

"I have announced in the leading journals that a handsome reward will be given to a driver of any public conveyance who drove a fare to 40, Postoffice, about 10 o'clock on the morning of the 24th of October. Information to be addressed to 'M. R.' at the office of the Epoque, but no answer has resulted. The man may have walked, but as he was most likely in a hurry there was a chance that he might have gone in a cab. Who, I keep asking myself night and day, is the man who so strongly resembles M. Robert Darzac and who is also known to have bought the cane which has fallen into Larsan's hands?

"The most serious fact is that M. Darzac was at the very same time that his double presented himself at the postoffice down for a lecture at the Sorbonne. He had not delivered that lecture, and one of his friends took his place. When I questioned him as to how he had employed the time he told me that he had gone for a stroll in the Bois de Boulogne. What do you think of a professor who instead of giving his lecture obtains a substitute to go for a stroll in the Bois de Boulogne? When Frederic Larsan asked him for information on this point he quietly replied that it was no business of his how he spent his time in Paris, on which Fred swore aloud that he would find out without anybody's help.

"All this seems to fit in with Fred's hypothesis—namely, that M. Stangerson allowed the murderer to escape in order to avoid a scandal. The hypothesis is further substantiated by the fact that Darzac was in the yellow room and was permitted to get away. That hypothesis I believe to be a false one. Larsan is being misled by it, though that would not displease me did it not affect an innocent person. Now, does that hypothesis really mislead Frederic Larsan? That is the question—that is the question."

"Perhaps he is right," I cried, interrupting Rouletabille. "Are you sure that M. Darzac is innocent? It seems to me that these are extraordinary coincidences"—

"Coincidences," replied my friend, "are the worst enemies to truth."

"What does the examining magistrate think now of the matter?"

"M. de Marquet hesitates to accuse M. Darzac in the absence of absolute proofs. Not only would he have public opinion wholly against him, to say nothing of the Sorbonne, but M. and Mlle. Stangerson. She adores M. Robert Darzac. Indistinctly as she saw the murderer, it would be hard to make the public believe that she could not have recognized him if Darzac had been the criminal. No doubt the yellow room was very dimly lit, but a night light, however small, gives some light. Here, my boy, is how things stood when three days, or, rather, three nights, ago an extraordinarily strange incident occurred."

CHAPTER XIV.

"I Expect the Assassin This Evening."

"I MUST take you," said Rouletabille, "so as to enable you to understand, to the various scenes. I myself believe that I have discovered what everybody else is searching for—namely, how the murderer escaped from the yellow room without any accomplice and without Mlle. Stangerson having had anything to do with it. But so long as I am not sure of the real murderer I cannot state the theory on which I am working. I can only say that I believe it to be correct and in any case a quite natural and simple one. As to what happened in this place three nights ago, I must say it kept me wondering for a whole day and night. It passes all belief. The theory I have formed from the incident is so absurd that I would rather matters remained as yet unexplained."

Saying which, the young reporter invited me to go and make the tour of the chateau with him. The only sound to be heard was the crunching of the dead leaves beneath our feet. The silence was so intense that one might have thought the chateau had been abandoned. The old stones, the stagnant water of the ditch surrounding the donjon, the bleak ground strewn with the dead leaves, the dark, skeleton-like outlines of the trees—all contributed to give to the desolate place, now filled with its awful mystery, an aspect the most funereal. As we passed round the donjon we met the Green Man, the forest keeper, who did not greet us, but walked by as if we had not existed. He was looking just as I had formerly seen him through the window of the Donjon inn. He had still his fowling piece slung at his back, his pipe was in his mouth and his eyeglasses on his nose.

"An odd kind of fish," Rouletabille said to me in a low tone.

"Have you spoken to him?" I asked.

"Yes, but I could get nothing out of him. His only answers are grunts and shrugs of the shoulders. He generally lives on the first floor of the donjon—a big room that once served for an oratory. He lives like a bear, never goes out without his gun and is only pleasant with the girls. The women for twelve miles round are all setting their caps for him. For the present he is paying attention to Mme. Mathieu, whose husband is keeping a lynx eye upon her in consequence."

After passing the donjon, which is situated at the extreme end of the left wing, we went to the back of the chateau. Rouletabille, pointing to a window which I recognized as the only one belonging to Mlle. Stangerson's apartment, said to me:

"If you had been here two nights ago you would have seen your humble servant at the top of a ladder about to enter the chateau by that window."

As I expressed some surprise at this piece of nocturnal gymnastics, he begged me to notice carefully the exterior disposition of the chateau. We then went back into the building.

"I must now show you the first floor of the chateau, where I am living," said my friend. He motioned me to follow him up a magnificent flight of stairs ending in a landing on the first floor. From this landing one could pass to the right or left wing of the chateau by a gallery opening from it. This gallery, high and wide, extended along the whole length of the building and was lit from the front of the chateau facing the north. The rooms, the windows of which looked to the south, opened out of the gallery. Professor Stangerson inhabited the left wing of the building. Mlle. Stangerson had her apartment in the right wing.

We entered the gallery to the right. A narrow carpet laid on the waxed oaken floor, which shone like glass, deadened the sound of our footsteps. Rouletabille asked me in a low tone to walk carefully as we were passing the door of Mlle. Stangerson's apartment. This consisted of a bedroom, an anteroom, a small bathroom, a boudoir and a drawing room. One could pass from one to another of these rooms without having to go by way of the gallery. The gallery continued straight to the western end of the building, where it was lit by a high window. At about two-thirds of its length this gallery at a right angle joined another gallery following the course of the right wing.

The better to follow this narrative we shall call the gallery leading from the stairs to the eastern window the "right" gallery and the gallery quitting it at a right angle the "off turning" gallery. It was at the meeting point of the two galleries that Rouletabille had his chamber, adjoining that of Frederic Larsan, the door of each opening on to the "off turning" gallery, while the doors of Mlle. Stangerson's apartment opened into the "right" gallery.

Rouletabille opened the door of his room and after we had passed in carefully drew the bolt. I had not had time to glance around the place in which he had been installed when he uttered a cry of surprise and pointed to a pair of eyeglasses on a side table.

"What are these doing here?" he asked.

I should have been puzzled to answer him.

"I wonder," he said—"I wonder if this is what I have been searching for. I wonder if these are the eyeglasses from the presbytery."

He seized them eagerly, his fingers caressing the glasses. Then looking at me, with an expression of terror on his face, he murmured, "Oh, oh!"

He repeated the exclamation again and again, as if his thoughts had suddenly turned his brain.

He rose and, putting his hand on my shoulder, laughed like one demented as he said:

"Those glasses will drive me silly. Mathematically speaking, the thing is possible, but humanly speaking it is impossible, or afterward, or afterward"

PANGS AND TORTURES OF A WEAK STOMACH

Prompt Relief and Cure Can be Obtained Through Dr. Williams' Pink Pills

Indigestion is a condition in which the stomach is more or less unable to digest the food. Even a light case of indigestion means much misery, but when the trouble is at its worst the life of the sufferer is one of constant and acute misery. Indigestion is recognized by a burning sensation in the stomach, bloating, an oppressive feeling of weight, belching wind, pains in the region of the heart, often vomiting and nausea, and a dread of food for the misery it causes. Dieting and the use of pre-digested foods may give some relief, but will never cure indigestion. The work of indigestion depends upon the blood and the nerves and the only way to cure indigestion is to tone up the stomach that it will do the work that nature intended it should do. The very best way to cure a weak stomach is through a course of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. These renew the blood, strengthen the nerves and thus give tone to the stomach, and enable it to do its work with ease and comfort. No one suffering from indigestion in even the slightest form, should neglect the trouble for an instant; to do so means that it obtains a firmer hold, and daily the misery and suffering is increased, and the cure made more difficult. At the first approach of the trouble take Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and it will cure even the most obstinate case of indigestion, but naturally it takes longer to do so. Mr. Philip Lafleur, St. Jerome, Que., says: "After I left college, when I had studied hard for four years, I suffered so much from indigestion that I found it difficult to earn my living. I was troubled with terrible pains, a bloating feeling, and a sourness in the stomach. This led to a loss of appetite and I began to show signs of a nervous breakdown. I tried several different treatments without finding any ap-

PLEASANT HOURS SPENT BY EPWORTH LEAGUERS

The Junior Epworth League of the George street Methodist church held a picnic at West Nicholls Park yesterday evening, at which the young people spent a very pleasant two or three hours. During the evening a pause took place in the games, and a presentation of a handsome tie pin each was made to two of the members, Masters Lester and Vaughan Pearson, who are about to leave the city. Miss Stella Sherwin read the address and the presentation was made by Master Joe Zepp. The address was as follows:

We, the members of the Junior League, take this opportunity of expressing our sincere regrets at your departure from among us. During your stay in the city we have always found you willing to take your part pleasantly in any work in the League you were called upon to do, and we assure you your efforts have been helpful, and we will all miss you very much, but hope that in your new home in Hamilton you will find still more work to do for the Master, whom you served among us. Your regular attendance at our meetings, too, has been an incentive to others of us, and your ever willing spirit has often urged some of us to do more.

We ask you now to accept this little remembrance as a token of our appreciation of your work.

Signed on behalf of the Junior League.

WHAT IS A GOOD NAME?

Mrs. Fitzgerald, 460 Charlotte street, was the first one to send in a suggestion as to naming the Smith street bridge.

Mr. Fitzgerald is patriotic and thinks that the Queen should be remembered. She believes that Victoria Bridge or Osborne Bridge would make a good name.

Those having names to suggest are invited to mail them, 'phone them or deliver them orally to the Editor of the Review.

Those sending in a name for the bridge will not be personally mentioned, if so requested.

CONTRACT EXPIRES ON AUGUST 1

Between Radial Railway and Government—Could be Renewed Mr. Larmonth Thinks

The contract between the Government and the Peterborough Radial Railway for the extension of the line to Lakefield, calls for the completion of the construction by August 1st.

To the Review this morning Mr. J. H. Larmonth stated that the company had temporarily given up the idea of the Lakefield extension on account of the closing of the cement works. This would reduce the freight traffic by more than half, and the [illegible] senger [illegible] only be for three months a year.

Mr. Larmonth was of the opinion that the contract with the government could be successfully approached to renew the contract.

WHERE THE ERRORS WERE

The advertisements in last night's band programmes in which the errors appeared were A. Campbell's, Coleman Bros., and Dr. Bulkinghorn's.

"Lucky Lambton."

So Sir Hedworth Lambton, whose engagement to Lady Chelsea is announced, is known in the navy; for, although he has seen much fighting, he has escaped scathless. He joined the service as a boy of fourteen, and was present at the bombardment of Alexandria and the Battle of Tel-el-Kebir. It is in connection with the siege of Ladysmith, however, that he is especially famous, and Sir George White has described him as the "life of the garrison throughout the siege." Sir Hedworth, by the way, tells a good story of Sir George. During the war in South Africa an order was issued that all men of the Highland regiments must cover up their uniforms, as it was thought that they made too obvious targets for the enemy. Sir George White, who knew that the order would not prove popular, thought of a way out of the difficulty. "Let them cover the front of their uniforms," he said; "the enemy will never see the other side."

THE CHOIR HAD ANNUAL PICNIC

Charlotte St. Choristers Went to Jubilee and Idyl Wyld

The steamer Lintonia carried a merry group of choristers and their friends down to Idyl Wyld yesterday.

It was the annual outing of the Charlotte street church choir.

The boat left the Wolfe street wharf at 9 o'clock with about forty people on board, and reached Idyl Wyld at 12.30.

Excellent music was rendered on the trip down by several members of the choir. Arriving at the hotel at Idyl Wyld they did justice to an excellent dinner dinner provided specially for the occasion by Mr. Cook, the genial proprietor. All present are loud in their praises of the repast.

After dinner a game of baseball was played by the ladies; the men were contented to act as spectators.

At three o'clock the picnickers took the boat to Gore's Landing. There they inspected the new Anglican church lately erected, and tried their voices in the church choir, much to the delight of the villagers. A stay was made here till five o'clock.

The party went back to Jubilee, where a football match was played. No set rules were observed in this game.

The excursionists arrived home about ten o'clock, after having spent a decidedly pleasant outing.

The choir desire to extend their sincere thanks to the members of the Trustee Board, to whose kindness they are indebted for the use of the boat free of expense to themselves.

Much of the success of the day was due also to the energy and activity of Mr. D. Flemming, who was in charge of the arrangements.

ST. JAMES' EXCURSION.

ST. ANDREW'S PICNIC to Jubilee Point and Idyl Wyld Wednesday, June 27th. Boat will leave Wolfe Street wharf at 8:30 and proceed to Jubilee for dinner. Tea at Idyl Wyld.

REPORT WAS NOT CORRECT

Acting Chief Adams states that Ellis, the hangman, did not appear, as reported, at the police station with a camera, asking that the negative containing a snapshot of himself, be destroyed. However, the person who attempted to take a picture of Ellis, probably unknown to himself, was committing a criminal offence.

A Musical Day

Capt. McGrath, an excellent musician from Cobourg, will be here to-night and to-morrow and the Salvation Army temple and streets will be filled with excellent music. A musical festival will be given in the temple at three o'clock.

OLD LONDON BRIDGE.

It Linked the Twelfth Century With the Eighteenth.

For centuries old London bridge, with its double row of houses, was the home of generations who lived and traded over the Thames waters.

Holbein lived and painted there. Osborne, the prentice lad, leaped through a window in the house of his master, Sir William Hewet, to the rescue of Sir William's daughter, who had fallen into the swollen flood of the river below, and by winning her for his wife laid the foundation of the ducal house of Leeds. Crispin Tucker had his shop on the bridge, to which Pope and Swift and many another author of fame made pilgrimages to purchase books and gossip with the waggish shopkeeper. Crocker's Dictionary was printed "at the Looking Glass on London bridge," and gigantic corn mills dominated the south end of the structure, not many yards from the wonderful Nonsuch House, a huge wooden pile with turrets and cupolas brought from Holland.

Such in brief outline was the London bridge which linked the twelfth with the eighteenth century and which when it was on its last tottering legs was removed to give place to its fine successor of our day, the stone in which is said to be "nearly double that employed in building St. Paul's cathedral."—Montreal Standard.

His Danger.

In these days of almost pre-eminent German music and musicians it is rather amusing to read the opinions of former generations concerning Teutonic singers.

Frederick the Great was so impolitely unpatriotic as to declare that he would rather hear the neighing of a horse than the singing of a German prima donna. Perhaps in his day there was some excuse for such a remark, but the times have changed.

There is a diverting anecdote of an Italian who was convinced that no German could sing. A friend induced him to go to the opera where Henriette Sontag sang. After hearing her first aria the Italian got up to go. The friend urged him to stay, assuring him that he would be convinced soon.

"I know it," repied the Italian, "and that's why I go."

Doves and Coronations.

At the ancient ceremonies of coronation of the French kings after the anointing had been performed some white doves were let loose in the church. This was supposed to symbolize the power of the Holy Ghost in directing the king's actions. A similar idea seems to have inspired all early kings, for among the English regalia is the rod of equity or the scepter with the dove. This is simply a golden rod with a mound at the top, which supports a cross. On this cross is a dove, fashioned of white enamel, with expanded wings. Some fine diamonds ornament the rod in various places.

Gender of Garlic.

"Why is garlic masculine gender?" asked the man who markets. "It must be masculine because the greengrocers I buy from call it 'he.' They are mostly Italians and ought to know the sex of garlic if anybody does. Of all the vegetables and aromatic herbs I buy garlic is the only one to which masculine virtues are ascribed. Everything else is neuter. To call garlic 'it' would be an insult. The garlic, he is fresh, he is fine, he is cheap, he is dear. Funny, isn't it?"—New York Times.

At Coalpit Heath, near Bristol, three deserted chickens are being well cared for by a cat, which is also rearing two kittens.

AN UP-TO-DATE STOVE
Do you realize there is no longer any reason why you should use a coal range? Oil is cheaper than coal; it is lighter and easier to handle, and gives an intense heat. Provided you have the right stove, oil is more economical, cleaner and less trouble. Have you seen the
New Perfection

Oil Cook-stove
The accompanying illustration gives you only a rough idea of its appearance. You really can't appreciate it until you either use it yourself, or talk to someone who has used it. It does everything that a coal range will do—except heat the room. The New Perfection Oil Cook-Stove will do anything, from heating a kettle of water to cooking a course dinner, but it won't heat a room. It doesn't "smell," it doesn't smoke. It can't get out of order. Light it and it is ready. Turn it down and it is out. Only a woman who knows the trouble of carrying coal and cooking in a hot kitchen can appreciate what it means to have a clean, perfect stove that will cook anything, boil, bake or roast, and yet won't heat the kitchen. How is it done? The flame is controlled in turquoise-blue enamel chimneys, and directed against the bottom of pot, pan, kettle or oven, and only there. The flame operates exactly where it is needed—and nowhere else. With this stove your kitchen is cool.
The nickel finish with the bright blue of the chimneys makes the stove ornamental and attractive. Made with 1, 2 and 3 burners; the 2 and 3-burner stoves can be had with or without Cabinet.

Cautionary Note: Be sure you get this stove—see that the name-plate reads "New Perfection."

PRESENTATION AT CLOSING MEETING

Of Golden Link Rebecah Lodge—Bro. Fred Reason Honored

At the conclusion of the Golden Link Rebekah Lodge on Tuesday evening last Bro. Fred. Reason, captain of the degree staff, was made the recipient of a costly and magnificent gold-headed umbrella. This meeting concluded the year, and the lodge considered that they should show some appreciation for the able manner in which Bro. Reason has fulfilled his office. Mrs. Sills made the presentation, and Mrs. Murduff, Noble Grand, read the following address:—

Dear Bro. Reason,—The members of Golden Link Rebekah Lodge would like to take this opportunity of expressing their appreciation of your faithful services as captain of the Degree staff.

The able manner in which you have always filled this office requires no small amount of patience and sacrifice, and we feel that both these have been manifested by you on more than one occasion.

As a very slight token of our gratitude and appreciation, we would ask you to accept this umbrella, with the hope that our continued relation in the future will be marked by the same pleasant associations as we have all enjoyed in the past.

Signed on behalf of the members of the Golden Link Rebekah Lodge.

After the presentation a sumptuous supper was partaken of, after which a most delightful social evening was spent.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

The Review does not hold itself responsible for opinions expressed by its correspondents

To the Editor of the Review.

Sir,—The citizens of Peterborough will thank Mrs. Kendrey for her letter on the misguided efforts of those who teach defiance of the law. The poor creature Henderson deserves our pity, but it is Miss McPherson who deserved our sympathy. There is nothing so hard to keep in check as emotionalism and there is nothing more dangerous to youth.

LOCAL GOLFERS WON ON THE LINDSAY LINKS

Lindsay Warder.

Fourteen members of the Peterborough gentleman's golf club visited Lindsay on Thursday and played a like number of local golfers on the links, the visitors proving victorious.

The visitors were loud in their praise of the treatment received at the hands of the members of both the ladies' and gentlemen's club and voted the afternoon one of the most enjoyable spent.

The afternoon tea given by Mrs. Thos. Stewart and Miss Flavelle was a delightful success, and the function afforded an opportunity for the golfers to fraternize, in social intercourse, which proved a pleasing climax to an afternoon delightfully spent.

WITHIN THE ROPES

They are having a laugh out at Reno, Nev., these days at the expense of John L. Sullivan. John L., who has enjoyed the distinction of being a limelight performer in years gone by, got everything else but the glad hand on arriving at the Jeffries camp. They say the visitor has been using the hammer in explaining the incidentals of the coming fight between the ex-riveter and the Texan beauty.

"Mr. Jeffries will not see you," was the polite answer from another gladiator of bygone days, Jimmie Corbett by name, to Mr. Sullivan's query.

The boilermaker makes the boast that he can fight one hundred rounds if necessary. The general feeling at the camp is that the bout will go at least 20 rounds.

Work starts on the big arena today.

When Jeffries romps into the ring to meet his black opponent it will be after an absence of six years and nearly two months.

No tape will be worn by the undefeated one, and, says James, "I'll put him away without breaking my hands.

SPORTING COMMENT

The Ottawa Citizen, on its editorial page of recent date, notes that two thousand people attended a local baseball game last Saturday, and then goes on to deplore the lacrosse situation.

The game of the gutted stick is slowly dying away and perhaps the lack of interest shown by players and public alike, will be the means of lessening the list of injured and permanently maimed.

Lacrosse was a good game, and is still, but, as the Citizen points out, the inside play has done much to take away its individuality.

But who is complaining of the lack of interest? Not the public, who have patronized the game, but the men who have been partly responsible for its deterioration.

When large salaries are paid and two or three teams get all the really good players, there remains very little encouragement for youngsters to get into the game. They may be even faster than the high priced men, and here's where some of the trouble crops up.

The crowd yells, "Stick with him, kid," "show him up," etc., etc., and the sequel is a broken limb or a bad cut, which stops the play, calls the policeman, and an arrest follows.

While this sort of play may look good to some, the average spectator abhors it, and does not put in an appearance at the next game.

THE POLICEMAN'S DREAM

The blue smoke had faded, the meerchaum went out, and the cop lay asleep, no one else was about; save his four-footed guards, they came inl ike a train, to remain there on duty till he woke up again. His head slowly nodded, to dream he began; he dreamt that the "coop" had been placed under ban. First he saw a great building, and he whiffed at the air, his dream almost ended, so fresh was it there. The Chief's downstairs office was fitted up swell, and the cells down the line were all filled, he could tell, that the cutups and drunks had forgotten their plight and were feeling no ill from the chill of the night. And he thought that the time came for payment of fares, but instead of a walk up the long golden stairs, a little bell tinkled and the cage downward came to escort all the "penned" to the hallway of blame. No frown on the face of the man on the bench, there appeared for the reason, there wasn't that stench. Each case was soon finished, each drunk took his pill and the black looking rig took them up to the hill.

Then he woke up.

GRACEFUL and Original Models for Summer Wraps

BY MRS. A. T. ASHMORE.

THE present style of dress makes it possible, indeed obligatory, to have an unusual number of outside garments or separate wraps, and not only is there a jacket for the simple street costume but also afternoon and evening wraps galore. Discussed and rediscussed is the question of the length of the coat. Shall it be long or short, tight or loose, simple or elaborate? And alas! no definite conclusion is arrived at, so that after ordering a long, loose coat it is to say the least disconcerting to be told that the short and much more tightly fitting jacket is far the smartest of all. There being no rule commanding all gowns made alike, it is perhaps a wise plan to have the different styles for the different costumes, but there are many women who prefer to keep to a certain style in all their gowns and do not care for the variety, and they make objections to this somewhat involved state of affairs. On the other hand, the woman who delights in always being in most up to date gowns enjoys the contrasts she is able to obtain by being one day gowned in one style and another day in another.

The long, all enveloping cloaks and mantles, for the old fashioned word mantle is once again heard in the land, are most graceful and generally becoming. The lines are the same whether the garment is intended for afternoon or evening wear, but the evening wraps are wider and longer. It requires a good figure and a knowledge of how to stand well to wear some of the most voluminous of these wraps, but so becoming are they when correctly worn that it seems strange that every woman in the world does not at once go into training to make the wearing of them possible. There is no hard and fast rule as to what material shall be chosen. Satin—Liberty satin—is fashionable, but soft finish cloth or silk, chiffon, net and lace one and all are in style, so that there is practically unlimited choice in material as well as color.

Wide, Full Cloaks.

It seems strangely paradoxical that in these days of exaggeratedly scant skirts and with every effort made to look as slight as possible, this fashion of wide, full cloaks should have gained ground. It may be in anticipation of the full, wide skirts that are predicted for next season, but it is certainly not according to the usual order of events, and can only be explained by the theory that Dame Fashion is determined the conspicuous and incongruous shall be accepted by her followers. Could there be anything more incongruous than one of the newest, the really, truly newest of models for an evening wrap or mantle, made of unlined pleated chiffon in the most fascinating shade of brown and trimmed with a deep band of sable? Fur in summer always seems like an attempt to be original and a wish to be conspicuous, but it should be remembered that fashions are not designed just for one country only, where in winter the heaviest of outer garments are worn and in summer the lightest possible, but for a climate that permits of the wearing of fur all the year, so that chiffon and fur combined are not so incongruous. Marabout and ostrich feathers are even newer as trimming for chiffon cloaks and are in great demand.

Much attention is paid to the fit over the shoulders of all mantles, and it is the modiste's task to so arrange that across the shoulders the garment shall fit to perfection and then below the shoulders fall loose and wide, measuring yards in circumference. An effecive and popular trimming that helps to emphasize good lines is velvet ribbon, preferably black. There is no fixed rule as to the quantity to be used, but it should be remembered that the lines must be kept long, otherwise a thick, clumsy look will be given that will quite spoil the most graceful cloak ever designed. All colors are fashionable for these mantles, and black lined with color is most popular. White, strange to say, is the least in favor, although there are some most attractive mantles in white, lined with a pale shade, that will look charming with white or light colored chiffon or satin evening gowns.

Evening Wraps of Satin.

The evening wraps of satin are almost identically the same as the others, only if intended wholly for evening they can be more elaborately trimmed. Gold and silver braiding looks decidedly incongruous with any wrap worn in the daytime. A most effective and becoming evening wrap that has graceful lines is in deep crimson satin, with an embroidered design in gold cutting the entire cloak. The same pattern can be taken as a foundation, with the embroidery only around the top and down the fronts, and if economy has to be faced, then the embroidery only around the neck is sufficient, and big tassels or a flat ornament will finish off the embroidery when the cloak is fastened. A delightfully luxurious touch is to be noticed in the costly wraps. Over the satin lining is a lining of chiffon. This is not new this season, but has gained in favor with the craze that is so widespread for veiled effects. It is contended that the garment is much more easily put on and taken off when there is this chiffon lining, but as there are no sleeves, and, as has been said, the wider and looser the cloak the more in style it is, this point can hardly be used in its defence. But it is one of those subtle and fascinating fads that are so dear to the heart of a woman, and which give her the serene consciousness and consequent poise that only the knowledge of being perfectly turned out can ever bestow.

The wonderful advance in dress is shown in the simpler styles more than in anything else. The loose motor coat, light or heavy, is a wonderful garment, while the so-called travelling or tourist coat is no longer ugly, shapeless and aggressively unbecoming, but is often one of the most becoming articles of clothing. To be warm and light is demanded of the travelling coat, and the materials now provided for the purpose certainly fulfil those requirements. Vicuna cloth, coats that look like Teddy bears, soft, wide wale serge, all sorts of cheviots and rough cloths and the white blanket coats—these are all to be found ready made, and the private tailors have never had so many orders as this season. Black and white plaids, not small checks, trimmed with black satin facings and gilt buttons, are smart, but the more conservative taste selects the light tan vicuna cloth without any trimming. Even raincoats are made becoming, and, while light enough in weight to wear over an inside coat, have sufficient warmth to be worn over a light gown. The Rosebery cloth and all the cravenetted materials are really waterproof and yet can be made both becoming and smart for the purpose for which they are manufactured—as a protection from wind and weather.

Cloth cloaks are not for the moment so smart as the satin, but a cheap, good quality of satin is not to be compared with a cloth of the same price, so for the woman who must count pennies must the warning be given to buy carefully. All the leading shops display a remarkable assortment of satin cloaks and there are always to be discovered some bargains among them, but a striking color and good lines hide serious defects and money is often literally thrown away in the purchase of an effective satin cape that after being worn two or three times will look hopelessly shabby.

PRACTICAL DETAILS OF HOME DRESSMAKING.

ALL fashion magazines and countless advertisements counsel the home dressmaker to be sure to buy a good pattern and a dress form if anything like serious dressmaking is to be attempted. That a good pattern is of inestimable service is certainly true, and that a dress form that is identical in every way with the figure makes dressmaking a far less difficult problem no one will deny, but it is not advisable until a certain degree of proficiency is obtained to attempt the elaborate styles that require skilled workmanship, but to strive for a result that demands good lines; then, if so desired, by the aid of trimmings a much more elaborate effect can be gained.

The present fashion of the loosely fitting waist is not so easy as it seems. The fulness at the sides must be most carefully attended to, so that the figure will not look too thick above the waist line; the kimono sleeve and the waist and sleeve in one have to be carefully cut so that the loose, wide armhole be not placed too low, for that gives a most unbecoming appearance. If the waist be made of thin lace or net then there must be a veiling or interlining of chiffon between the material and the lining, but this interlining must not be too full or again the much dreaded bulkiness will give the bad lines. And this warning is equally applicable to slight and to stout figures, for with the inner lining too full the lines of the waist are at once thrown out of proportion in a most noticeable manner and all smart effect is lost.

BUDGET OF INTERESTING NEWS FROM HAVELOCK

Havelock, June 25—

Dr. H. C. Kindred, of town, has been appointed on the staff of the C.P.R. physicians.

Chief Bennet arrested a Peterborough youth of 12 years, Norman Green by name, at the residence of Mr. Little, of Belmont, on Saturday last. The youngster was wanted at Peterborough on a charge of stealing money, and was sent back to that city.

AN APPEAL.

Mr. Wm. Griffith, of town, has appealed against the judgment for $400 and costs, awarded to Frederick Scott, of Belmont, on Monday [illegible] Peterborough in an action in which Scott claimed that after leasing and doing certain work thereon, defendant refused to allow him to enter on the property.

The case will now come up before the Divisional Court at Toronto.

A meeting for the purpose of organizing a branch of the Womans' Institute will be held on Saturday, July 9th.

The passenger train changes by the new time table that came into effect on Sunday are: No. 7, the local express, leaves at 7 a.m., and the west-bound express in the afternoon at 3.55 p.m. This is a little earlier than the old schedule.

The village School Board held their retular monthly meeting in the school house on Tuesday night last.

FISH STORIES.

The fishing has been excellent in the many lakes and rivers surrounding Havelock since the opening of the season, and the anglers from town are visiting these waters in great numbers. The first day of the open season saw a lot of fishermen from Toronto and Buffalo enjoying themselves here, especially at Trent River, where the lunge fishing is excellent. The fishing season has brought forth another contest in stories, and if the fish are as large in proportion as some of their (tales) it is no wonder that there is a call for fish hooks at the hardware store.

The crop report in this vicinity is very favorable so far. The hay crop will be very heavy and the grains are coming along nicely unless they receive a check. The farmers in Belmont are sowing a great deal of corn this year, and claim it is excellent foddder for the cattle during the fall. Vegetables are a little backward on account of the cool weather of a few weeks ago, but are growing nicely now. The strawberry crop looked excellent at first, but the several heavy frosts will make a very short supply.

WEDDING BELLS.

A quiet wedding took place recently at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Hinder, 172 Bolton Avenue, Toronto, when their eldest daughter, Miss Emma Hinder, was united in marriage to Mr. John King, son of Mr. and Mrs. Noah King, of Belmont. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. W. H. Wallace, and the bride was tastefully attired in a brown travelling suit with hat to match. Mr. and Mrs. King will reside at "Lakeview," Belmont.

CROWDS ATTEND EXHIBITION OF FLYING AT MONTREAL

Walter Brookins, in a Wright Biplane, Makes the First Ascent—Count de Lesseps Flies Rings Around Cromwell Dixon's Dirigible Balloon.

Montreal, June 27.—At last Canada has a real aviation meet. It opened at Lake Side, 13 miles from Montreal Saturday afternoon. Many of the world-beaters among the navigators of the uncharted paths of the upper air, where ruts are a thing unknown, and where there are no policemen standing on the cloud corners to enforce speed regulations, will on airy wave of the hand, were there with their machines, ready to try for new records.

One of the most spectacular features of the afternoon's events was the way in which Count Jacques de Lesseps, in his aeroplane, went up, while Cromwell Dixon's dirigible balloon was in the air, and literally flew rings around him, flying over and under the big gas bag and all round it, while the spectators cheered the performance.

Walter Brookins, in one of the four Wright Bros.' biplanes, was the first to mount from the earth, making a short flight about the field. It was shortly after 12 when the hum of the two huge propellers announced that the meet was begun. The machine skidded along the ground and rose rapidly. Brookins circled the field and described several figure eights, demonstrating the absolute control he exercised over the machine. He landed, after being in the air about three minutes and traveling about a mile and a half. Until shortly before three o'clock in the afternoon there were no other flights.

Then Brookins, before a crowd of five thousand people, again flew. His manoeuvres were much the same as during the morning, although conducted at a much higher altitude.

He was greeted with enthusiastic applause and wild cheers as he hung above the immense grand stand.

For five minutes he was in the air, traveling 3 1-2 miles, circling at all times.

He made a most successful landing.

A little later M. Miljean essayed a flight in a Bleriot machine, owned by William Carruthers, a local man. As the machine ran along the way, it slewed to the right, struck a depression, and one wheel landed in an old well.

Miljean again tried. This time his machine rose a short distance, began to slide and, after traveling 100 yards, struck the ground in front of the moving picture machines, smashing the propeller, damaging the engine and injuring much of the under framework. The aviator himself was not hurt.

From then on flights continued with short intermissions during the remainder of the afternoon. Cromwell Dixon went up in his dirigible airship, and Count de Lesseps flew over and under and around him. The count's flight was longer than Brookins', and covered much more territory. He was cheered most enthusiastically. When landing he glided for a hundred feet before the wheels of his machine struck the ground.

The centre of attraction was young Cromwell Dixon's tent, where the youthful balloonist strutted around like an admiral on the quarter-deck of his flagship, issuing orders without let-up to his men, and often lapsing into real nautical language, when things went wrong. He himself painted the joints of his balloon carefully with some water and air-tight compound, and afterwards had the gossamer-like fabric blown up with an air-pump to discover any possible leak, making the thing look, when it was half-filled and blown about by the prevailing breeze, like some huge prehistoric snail, wallowing in its cave.

SETTLEMENT NOW POSSIBLE

C.P.R. and Its Trainmen May Make Peace.

Montreal, June 27.—The situation in regard to the negotiations between the C.P.R. and its trainmen now appears to be that, after having served ultimatums upon one another, the two parties are looking to a peaceful settlement. A conference between the representative of the men and the company has been arranged for today, and it is prophesied that this will pave the way for an agreement.

A considerable number of the men do not want a strike, their feelings in this regard being dictated by the fact that they have a considerable number of years' service to their credit in the company's books, and if they were to go out they would lose this and thus be shut out of the pension, to which they will become entitled by a few years' more service.

That interruption of a service by a strike invalidates the pension claim, was brought home to the men by the machinists' strike a couple of years ago, when many men were compelled to re-enter the company's employ as new employes, though some of them had ten or fifteen years' service to their credit. These men argue that the award of the board of arbitration gave the men a substantial advance, particularly in the poorer paid branches of the service, and that, taking into consideration all the circumstances, the acceptance by the company of the award is about as far as it should be asked to go. There has been no change in regard to the Grand Trunk situation.

STARTED OUT TO POISON CATS

Detroit, June 27.—George H. Harrington, a Detroit accident insurance solicitor, came home early Friday to poison a cat. Stopping at a market and a drug store he purchased a supply of meat and arsenic. Mrs. Harrington was not home when he arrived, and he decided under such advantageous circumstances to [illegible] all the cats in the neighborhood. Mixing the meat and arsenic, he placed them on the kitchen table and went in search of felines.

While he was obsent Mrs. Harrington arrived and hurriedly prepared dinner. She used the poisoned meat. Doctor hold out slight hopes of the recovery of either Harrington or his wife.

LIEUTENANT GETS TWENTY YEARS

Vienna, June 27.—It is officially announced that Lieut. Adolph Hofrichter, who recently confessed to having sent poison to officers of the general staff, one of whom died, has been sentenced to be cashiered and to serve a twenty years' term of imprisonment.

Hofrichter was recently found guilty at a secret court martial, and it was reported that he had been sentenced to be hanged. He was arrested on Nov. 27 last, and after several months confinement he admitted that he had sent capsules containing prussic acid to ten members of the general staff. His sole motive, he asserted, was the hope of becoming a staff officer through the death of one of his superiors.

AN ENGLISHMAN COMMITS SUICIDE

St. Catharines, June 27.—A case of suicide occurred in the city yesterday, when Joseph Tavener, an Englishman, 32 years old, and an employe of the McKinnon Dash Co., took his life by swallowing paris green.

Tavener, who boarded on the western hill, has been despondent lately and has been subject to fits of intoxication. Saturday he attempted to swallow some paris green, but was prevented by the boarding-mistress. He was, however, afterwards successful.

Tavener gave as a reason for his act that he wished to prove that paris green was not poisonous.

His Life For His Brother.

Nelson Dafoe, aged 11, grandson of Robert Dafoe, Ottawa, was drowned in the lake at Chapleau while trying to save his little brother Albert, six years of age, who had fallen in. Albert was saved by some men.

DIRIGIBLES BALLOONS FOR ARMY

Rome, June 27.—The Chamber Saturday unexpectedly voted the expenditure of 10,000,000 lire (about $1,193,000) for dirigible balloons for the army.

The Socialists and Republicans opposed the proposal. They deplored increased army expenditure as useless, war being practically impossible. They advocated disarmament.

The discussion arose during the absence of the Minister of War. He was summoned from the Senate and made an eloquent appeal to the country's national honor.

The vote was then passed by a majority of 280.

LEFT FORTUNE FOR OLD LOVE

Spokane, Wash., June 27.—Mrs. Dolly Baker of Coeud d'Alene City, Idaho, is said to be heiress to $7,000,000. Twenty years ago she said good-bye to her girlhood sweetheart, A. B. Travers, in Montana, and he went to Australia. The girl grew tired of waiting and married Judge W. J. Grout, later divorcing him and marrying Baker.

Now comes word that Travers became a cattle king in Australia, accumulated $7,000,000, and died, leaving all to Mrs. Baker. Attorney R. F. Filmore has gone to Australia carrying proofs of Mrs. Baker's identity of claim the fortune for her.

Strike In Port Arthur?

Port Arthur, June 27.—It is possible that the conductors and motormen of the Port Arthur and Fort William Street Railway may go on strike Monday. Some days ago they refused the proffered increase, on the ground that it was not large enough.

A rumor was current Saturday that a strike would occur, but the men's committee refuse to affirm or deny this.

BANDITS IN LYNN, MASS., HOLD UP MEN IN HEART OF CITY

Four Men Are Dead and One Wounded as Result of the Most Daring Robbery in History of New England —Four Men Killed, One Wounded.

Lynn, Mass., June 26.—Four men were killed and one wounded here yesterday as the result of the most daring hold-up ever committed in New England. Three bandits killed two victims in the heart of the city, and fled with a valise containing between $4,000 and $5,000. Two of the three fugitives were shot to death in a bloody trail through the streets. The third was wounded and captured.

The dead—Thomas Landragen, shoe manufacturer, who carried the satchel, shot by highway man and almost instantly killed.

Policeman Thomas Carroll, who accompanied Landragen, shot by highwaymen; died in hospital.

Abe Abeson of New York, bandit, shot and instantly killed by policemen who pursued him.

Unidentified bandit, who either was shot by the pursuing policemen or committed suicide. Several bullet holes are in the body.

The third bandit, Bill Katanski of Boston, is under arrest, shot through the hand. All the money was recovered.

After the dash through the heart of the crowded city, with a dozen revolvers crashing in a running battle that outrivalled the wildest days of the far west, one of the fleeing men was seen to falter and then drop to the ground, while a second later another of his companions dropped.

Both were fatally shot and lived but a short time. When the third man was wounded, he surrendered.

Mr. Landragen and Policeman Carroll were on their way from the Lynn National Bank to the shoe factory of Walsh and Landragen, with the money. It was for the weekly payroll. It is believed that the two men saw them get it and dogged their steps.

Suddenly there appeared in the street in front of them a man with a revolver, which he began firing at once. He was accompanied by one or two others, but it was that one man did all the shooting.

Both men fell to the street. The men grabbed the satchel containing the money and fled.

SUBSTITUTE FOR SERVANTS

New York, June 27.—The servant girl problem has been solved in apartment houses. Here is good news for women. With a minimum charge of 20 cents a day for a small family, a service company has been formed to wash the dishes of tenants of apartment houses. Modern dish washing machines already have been installed in the basements of several large apartment houses, and the company will begin operations in a few days.

The company will provide each family with two boxes, one for china and silverware and one for pots and pans. The boxes will bear the number of the apartment and will fit the dumb waiter. Polite employes in uniform will call for the dishes after each meal, send them down the dumb waiter, wash them, and return them in a few minutes.

An interesting feature of this plan is that the company agrees to pay for all breakage. The employes are paid a bonus of $2 a week if they do not break or lose a dish, and are docked if they do.

MRS. MURPHY ACQUITTED

Bryson, Que., June 27.—Annie Murphy, who was charged with aiding and abetting in the murder of Howes and Dale, was found not guilty by the jury on Saturday. Judge Weir summed up very strongly against the prisoner, and when the jury brought in their verdict declared this was a black day for justice.

Mrs. Murphy's husband, who was sentenced to a year for threatening to reduce Shawville to ashes, comes up for trial on Wednesday for perjury. The point of the judge is that one day Murphy stated he saw a certain man going "across" a field and next day he swore he saw him go "on" a field.

Steamer Burned.

Lacrosse, Wis., June 27.—With fifteen hundred excursionists on board the Acme Packet Co.'s big steamer J. S. caught fire in the Mississippi River between Genoa and Victoria on Saturday night, although it was burned to the water's edge, prompt action in beaching the boat, saved every person on board.

ADVERTISE IN THE REVIEW.

HIS TOUR WINDS UP

R. L. Borden Has Finished His Ontario Trip.

Ottawa, June 27.—R. L. Borden, the Opposition leader, concluded his political tour of Ontario at Finch, Stormont County, on Saturday afternoon. He leaves for Nova Scotia on Wednesday, and, after a series of meetings in his native province, he will return west and make another political tour of Ontario in the fall. Indeed, he has tentative programs mapped out which will keep him busy right up to the next general election.

At Finch on Saturday the meeting took the form of a picnic, and was eminently successful. Altogether there must have been about 1,500 present.

Finch is strongly Liberal, but both parties united to give Mr. Borden a warm welcome. George L. McLean, reeve of the village, who is a prominent Liberal, in presenting an address to the Opposition leader, said: "We are pleased to note that our present visitors have fearlessly and honestly upheld the principles for which they stand, both in Parliament and before the country, and we hope that in the near future any public men at whom the finger of scorn is pointed, on account of actions that are not in the public interest and honestly upheld, will be driven permanently from public life."

Mr. and Mrs. Borden were accompanied from Ottawa by Mr. and Mrs. Geo. H. Perley. At Finch they were met by Andrew Broder, M.P., Dr. John D. Reed, M.P., Senator McMillan, J. G. Adams, J. H. Bradin, John McLaughlin, ex-M.P.P., J. C. Mulligan, Geo. Kerr, ex-M.P., Mr. J. Howard Ferguson, M.P.P., R. A. Pringle, ex-M.P., and many others. Hon. W. J. Hanna was unable to be present. The Opposition leader dealt with the tariff question.

CHURCH UNION PROGRESSING

London, June 27.—The delegates from the United States and Canada, who are returning from the World's Missionary Congress assert that the most notable result of that notable assembly was the trend toward unity of the churches.

This was shown in the atmosphere of devotion pervading the religious services, and especially in the debate following the report of the commission on co-operation and unity, and in the enthusiasm attending the formation of the international continuation committee, which will represent all the religious bodies in sympathy with the congress.

The delegates were impressed with the conviction, often expressed from the platform, that a great reward for the missionary zeal of the western churches would be the healing of divisions at home through the establishment of a modus vivendi abroad.

$20,000 FIRE IN LONDON

London, Ont., June 27.—A fire that resulted in the destruction of half the plant of the Wortman Ward Co. raged for several hours yesterday morning before being got under control. The fire was noticed by a railway employe at 3.30 and had a good start. The shipping room, paint and varnish rooms and boiler and engine rooms are gone, and the loss is placed at over $20,000. The firm manufactures churns, washing machines, wheelbarrows, etc., and employ about 200 men. The absence of a fire wall threatened the whole plant with destruction, and serious explosions of paint and varnish made conditions dangerous for the firemen.

ROOSEVELT TO ENTER POLITICS

Oyster Bay, N.Y., June 27.—Theodore Roosevelt is going to plunge into the political fight that will be waged this fall for the control of New York state. He persists in his refusal to talk politics for publication, but it may nevertheless be said with authority that he will devote his every effort to save the Republican party from the defeat which he thinks menaces the state.

He will leave it to the governor to decide whether or not he should retract his positive statements that he will not accept another nomination, sacrifice his place on the bench of the Supreme Court and go back into harness for two years more at Albany.

FIRST CONVICTION UNDER NEW LAW

Newark, N.J., June 27.—The first man convicted in this state under the law of 1910, making it a felony to live off the immoral earnings of a woman, was sentenced to the extreme penalty on Saturday of seven years' imprisonment.

The prisoner is Frank Rosenthal, a deserter from the United States Engineering Corps.

Three Lives Lost In Hotel Fire.

Seneca Falls, N.Y., June 27.—Three persons lost their lives and another had a narrow escape from serious injury in a fire that destroyed the new Seneca House here yesterday. A building adjoining the hotel was also burned. The loss is estimated at $40,000.

A monument to Champlain was unveiled at St. John Friday.

COL. SHERWOOD SEEKING FOR GOULDTHRITE IN NEW YORK

Departure of Chief of Dominion Police Seems to Show That Fugitive Civil Servant is Reported There—Chief Accountant Dismissed.

Ottawa, June 27.—Col. Sherwood, commissioner of Dominion police, left yesterday for New York. It is understood that he has received communications from the New York police which point to the presence in that city of Gouldthrite, the fugitive superintendent of stationery at the Government Printing Bureau. It was found impossible, however, to get any definite statement as regards Col. Sherwood's movements.

Albert Harwood, the chief accountant of printing, who has been dismissed, is a native of Ottawa and a French-Canadian.

Gouldthrite is well known in the capital, and was very popular among a large circle of acquaintances. Some five years ago he erected a house on Manor road, Rockliffe, to which, within the last year he has made many improvements. He has a wife and one child.

The Government will take proceedings to attach the property of Gouldthrite, and an inventory is now being taken by officials at his house. He was appointed to the position of superintendent of stationery in July, 1903. He is 47 years old.

As head of the department, Gouldthrite had charge, not only of the purchase of supplies for the Printing Bureau, but for all the departments, including the sessional supplies for the members of Parliament. These orders totalled close on to a million dollars per year.

Before the enquiry is over, many firms who have been doing business with the Printing Bureau will be subpoenaed to give evidence. All the instances of collusion between sellers of stationery and employes at the bureau concern firms in the United States. These firms, of course, are out of reach of the law, but if any Canadian houses are mixed up in the scandal, there is a certainty that they will be prosecuted.

It is stated that there is $56,000 worth of carbon paper on hand, enough to last for many years, although it is guaranteed to remain good for only six months.

CHANGE IN CORONATION OATH WILL DEVELOP A FIGHT

New York, June 27.—The Sun's London correspondent cables:

A bill altering the form of the offensive accession oath will be introduced on Tuesday. The budget for 1910-11 will be introduced Thursday. It is difficult to understand why Mr. Asquith considers the former measure uncontentious. It is doubtful whether the bill will pass its first reading on Tuesday without stirring up a storm. It will be opposed not only by the Irish Unionists, but by many other Protestants. Neil Primrose, M.P., Lord Rosebery's younger son, has been working against the bill, and now says he has a large number of members of the House of Commons behind him.

John Redmond, the Irish leader, who returned to London to attend the Bryan dinner, has issued a whip urging the Irish Catholic members of the House to be present at the session Tuesday.

Despite Mr. Asquith's pledge that the bill merely proposes an alteration in the language of the sovereign's declaration, and will not vary materially the conditions of the succession to the throne, there is bound to be trouble on Tuesday. Not only do average Protestants oppose any alteration in the form of the oath, but trouble is expected from the extreme high churchmen in the Commons and their friends on the Episcopal bench in the House of Lords, who object to any form of declaration which repudiates the doctrine of transubstantiation. Therefore Mr. Asquith's idea that the bill is not contentious, seems to be be quaint.

The budget, too, may prove a contentious subject. It is understood that Mr. Lloyd-George, Chancellor of the Exchequer, does not intend to lower the increased tax on whisky imposed last year. This will undoubtedly lead to heated opposition from the Irish members, aided by some of the Scotch members, and if the Unionists and Nationalists vote in favor of a motion reducing the tax the Government would be put in a minority, thereby precipitating a serious political crisis. The risk of a Tory-Irish combination against the Government on the budget is not serious, but it is possible. This is one of the risks which a Government without a homogenous majority must always face. Nobody believes that Mr. Redmond has sufficient power to hold up the budget.

INCREASING THE ARMY

Budapest, June 27.—The Emperor-King, Francis Joseph, opened the newly-elected Hungarian Parliament on Saturday.

In the speech from the throne he foreshadowed a democratic reform of the electoral system and an increase of the expenditure for the military forces. He concluded:

"The ever-increasing love of peace of the European states fills us with confidence in the stability of the blessings of peace."

STEAMER PRINZ OSKAR FLOATED

Quebec, June 27—The steamer Prinz Oskar, which ran ashore at Flower Cove, Straits of Belle Isle, a few days ago, came off the rocks Saturday afternoon, and is now on her way back to Quebec, accompanied by the Davie wrecking steamer Lord Strathcona. She left Flower Cove at 6.30 o'clock yesterday morning.

The steamer was floated with the assistance of the S. S. Prinz Adelbert and her own engines. According to the last information received, No. 1 hold of the vessel is badly damaged, while her forepeak is full of water.

FIRMER RULE FOR EGYPT

London, June 27.—A rumor published with irritable comment by The Manchester Guardian, that Sir Eldon Gorst will be recalled and that Sir Arthur Hardinge will be appointed his successor has not yet been confirmed. There is no evidence that Sir Edward Grey is prepared to sacrifice the British agent in Egypt.

They are likely to co-operate heartily in stiffening the British policy and taking up the Suez Canal convention with renewed vigor as a proof that the occupation of the Nile countries will be permanent.

Draughts and Colds.

London, June 27.—Dr. Sir Frederick Treves has astonished the public by declaring that the idea that colds are caused by draughts is absurd. "No cold," he says, "ever had such an origin. Colds are the result not of draughts, but of stuffy rooms." Other famous London physicians back up Sir Frederick in holding that no cold was ever caused by a draught.

Four Wounded In Tong War.

New York, June 27.—The "Tong War" that sleeps but never dies, broke out again yesterday in Chinatown, and in 92 seconds three Chinamen were shot, two of them fatally, a third was painfully wounded. Seven Chinamen were arrested.

TREATY TO BE RECONSIDERED

Boston, June 27.—Rumors are current at Manchester-by-the-Sea that the ambassadors from Russia and Japan will meet there this summer to reconsider certain parts of the treaty of Portsmouth, signed at Portsmouth, N.H., on September 5, 1905, formally ending the Russo-Japanese war.

The Japanese Embassy is already settled for the summer at East Gloucester. Baron Rosen, head of the Russian embassy, and a prominent figure at the negotiations at Portsmouth, has changed his plans and is coming to Manchester to spend the summer instead of going to Bar Harbor.

No official confirmation of the rumor could be obtained.

Is Alleged to Have Made False Returns of Monies Secured While Engaged in Delivering Goods.

Ross McCall, a young lad, appeared before Magistrate Dumble this morning, charged with the theft of $20 from the proprietor of Parker's Dye Works.

The prisoner elected to be tried summarily and pleaded not guilty.

The complainant was not in a position to submit his evidence and the case was enlarged till Wednesday morning.

McCall, during last April and May, while engaged as driver on one of the deliveries by the complainant, did not make correct returns of monies received for goods delivered to customers, so it is alleged.

SIR PIERIE

Pierie Pudrier should surely be knighted. He is the father of thirty-one children, and has been married three times. Pudrier has earned his spurs and should receive official recognition from the King. Thirty-one children, all no doubt were cross at teething, and had the array of childish complaints. Married three times, nothing less than a knighthood for Pudrier as a reward for bravery and ability.

WESTWARD

Westward ho! From Ireland and her shamrock from Scotland and her thistle from England and her rose they move out to the land that beckons them. From all lands, Westward ho! The world is watching, and behold they leave the continent, the land where the aristocrats are, where oppression rules, the lands that are barren and fields that are narrow, see them moving—pilgrims to the promised land. Behold the hand of the Magician is upon it. Some Aladdin with his lamp. To-night the prairie, to-morrow the village. Next week the town, next month a city with the rattling of vehicles, the clinking of money and the shutting of many doors. Westward ho! from horizons narrow to those that are wide, from traditions fetter to the freedom and fellowship of the the plains. Westward to a land where ability is not smothered or strength wasted by useless routine, on to fields that are fertile and mountains majestic, on to distance greater than the eye of man. On move the sons of men to the west, to greater chances and greater hopes, to greater things. On! The eye of the world upon us, the wondering eye of Europe, the admiring eye of our mother across the sea, and the envying eye of our brother to the south on, on to success. On they go, obscure to-day, philanthropists to-morrow, poor now, counting their thousands in the not dim future.

On, on! Different in religion, different in thought and opinion, but ever on, ever believing in the power that swings the world along, ever united on the fact that this is our land, and that the new comers are ever one with us to possess.

On! And as the sun slowly drops to the skyline overtaking and leaving the pilgrims in their new home land. May its vastness not dismay them, and may they not turn back.

DON'T HURRY SO

Don't hurry so; life is not so short as all that. The Lord took six days to complete things and then took a rest. If the Almighty took a rest, it might not hurt us to do the same. J. J. Hill, Man of Millions, proprietor of immensities, when in active business, took hours every day to read a good book, and rested as he read. His time is worth about $10 a minute. but there are those of us who have a weekly salary summed up in one figure, who think we can do nothing to rest ourselves, unless we have the price. We may not be able to girdle the globe, we may not have a million or a cent, but there are, for us, many sources of rest, that we may discover, many beauty spots that we all may see, and many restful thoughts that we all may cherish. They need not to be at the watering place, there is little rest there.

They need not be in the southland when the winter is chill, and the winds bleak. There is little rest there. Rest is not found in the chase, any more than pleasure is found by the votaries who have nothing to do but to pursue it. Take time to rest. 'Tis June, why hurry so. Pursuing novelty we lose contentment. The resting spots are close at hand in every day life on every side, but the trouble is we are looking too far away to see them. We would think sleep is rest, so it is, but there is a better rest, the rest to the soul, the aspiration from a picture, from a book, from the face of a friend. Try the silent hour alone. Go to the room, close the door and think, listen to the voices that speak to the soul. Then riches seem strangely shallow and the title, the great name, the great house, not more to be sought after than the place where men and women walk, the dwelling of life's humble ones.

Out from the silence will come the wind to wither the leaves, out from the silent north. Out from the silence will come the warm wind of spring time, to waken life and quicken our hearts, the warm winds from the silent somewhere we may never see.

We ate bread to-day, up from the silent earth sprang life, up into the spreading ear of wheat, and behold the miracle on our table, upon our lips, and in our mouths, and a part of our very beings, the bread from out the silence of the fields.

Rest in life's hour alone, the hour in the silence, and we receive fresh light on many things that now puzzle and bewilder us. We will see that much that men and women set their mind on is hardly worth the while, when the sum total of life is added up.

Rest in the silence in the silence in the hour, alone, then the white light of charity shines forth, and we see life's other side, and know that if we could but peep into some of the homes we once envied we would see many a skeleton hanging there.

Rest in the hour alone, pity some and envy less.

A GRUESOME MEMORY

It was early on a winter's morning one of those clear, cool days, your breath crowned with a halo of white and as the prison gates swung open we filed in greeted by no sound save the sound of our footsteps along the stone tiled floor. Then we paused to produce our credentials which took us past the inner gate, to the court yard. The voices of the morbid rose from without the high stone walls and curious eyes looked down from roofs of nearby houses. A clergyman bowed in sharing the agony of the awful hour stepped from the corridor and in tremulous tones read from the back of an envelope the confession of the doomed man. "I did it and I am sorry for my father and mother," Scarcely had his voice died away when another faltering tongue was heard in the words, "man that is borne of woman is of"—the corridor swung open and the march to the gallows began and pale—who would not be pale near throne of God, trembling, who that is sane would not tremble standing at eternity's awful door and supported on each side by an officer, a beardless boy went by. The glorious sun shot over the wall and he glanced at it, as the quarry glances at the hunter before the fatal end—glanced and disappeared in a shed that hid the gallows.

The twittering of a sparrow on the wall seemed a harsh discordant note, the sound of our heart throbs sacrilege. We saw no form. We heard no sound from within save the tremulous voice, "Our Father who art in heaven, hallowed by Thy name—"a sound, yes, the sobbing of a dying soul—Thy Kingdom come, Thy will be done," and as these precious words that have soothed so many souls to rest were slowly uttered the sun burst in its fullest glory upon us, "lead us not into temptation, but del—crash. It was only the body swinging there now, only a body waiting for the pine coffin by yonder open grave.

Allison was dead and the murder of Mrs. Orr in Galt had been avenged in Berlin.

DAMN

We may say that a thing is a damn lie and not be guilty of profane language. This will be welcome news to those who have often felt like using this word during the hot spell, and will assist in letting off superfluous mental energy. It will be invaluable to the man whose collar button rolls under the bureau. It will also be welcome information to deacons and elders and Sunday school superintendents whose vocabulary must naturally be circumscribed. "You are a damn liar," is not profane, neither is "It a damn lie." This decision has been arrived at in St. George, Ontario, by two magistrates when one man had another summoned for profane language the argument arising over a dog.

BLIND, DEAF AND DUMB

Blind, deaf and dumb, unable to speak, see or hear, Helen Kellar, aged thirty, is one of the intellectual wonders of the world. She has just completed a four years' course at college and acquitted herself in a manner that would bring credit to those who have possession of all their faculties. Blind, deaf and dumb, she has since been discovered by the light of the press, developed to be one of the wonders of the intellectual world, showing what kind teaching on one side, with indomitable will and determination on the other, can do.

KNOCKING

Don't knock your neighbor. Perhaps you have a few peculiarities and habits yourself. You maybe have your dark hours and bright ones. Some times you shout to the youngsters in an angry voice and give them a wallop because they do not hurry. Once in a while perchance you get into an argument with some one in the house. Well your neighbor is a bit human like yourself, so don't knock—don't knock your neighbor.

Don't knock the chap in the club, lodge or the church, who got more votes for the office than you did. Be too big, knocking is small business. He was probably elected because he was the best man available. However, there are other positions and there will be other elections, and the world is quite large.

Don't knock the business opponent. He has a right to live, to advertise, and get business. He may be a bit smarter than we are. Don't knock him, it may pay to study him and his methods.

Don't knock your friend, he wouldn't knock you and friends are rare birds. Don't knock your enemy. Every knock comes home. Don't knock, boost more.

W. E. KNOWLES

One of Sir Wilfrid Laurier's local champions in his farewell tour through the west will be W. E. K. Knowles, of Assiniboia. Mr. Knowles has commended himself to the Premier by an adroit shelving of the lower duties issue. For four years he has followed the practive every session of putting down, on the opening day, a resolution advocating the reduction of the tariff duties on such commodities as constitute the necessaries of the agricultural classes. The effect of this is that as long as the resolution stands, and as long as he does not push it, no other member in the House can bring the subject forward. It is a blocking resolution. Mr. Knowles has in this manner persistently blocked discussion of the subject. Thus he has served two purposes. He can go west, and say to his constituents;—See how keen I am in the cause of tariff reduction. I have had a resolution on the subject before Parliament And at Ottawa he can claim the gratitude of the Premier for having chloroformed the subject. His western constituents, indeed, if they understood the intricacies of Parliamentary practice, could put him to confusion by asking him if he ever pressed his resolution: and if not, why not?

Small Boy (outside): "Jove, wasn't that easy? And I was asleep in bed."

CHURCH TEACHING GHASTLY.

St. Thomas Times.

Dr. J. A. Macdonald, editor of the Toronto Globe, preaching at Knox Presbyterian church on Sunday evening on Paul's message to the members of the church at Corinth, as given in I. Corinthians, from the 28th verse of the 13th chapter, made an earnest appeal to the people of Canada to adopt the "still more excellent way" of which the apostle wrote, in political, professional, commercial, and educational affairs.

Referring to the gift of teaching, Dr. Macdonald asked "what more ghastly thing is there than the teaching part of the church's work to-day? to-day? It is time the church took up, he continued, the matter of education seriously. The State and Church schools sees more of the children than does the home. The standard of teaching in Sunday schools was lower than that in the Public and High schools and that was none too good. The church never needed more than she does to-day, that her members should excel in their particular work.

Congress has attempted the appointment of a commission for the promotion of universal peace and voted an appropriation of $100,000.

Farmers Plan to Impress Sir Wilfrid.

Winnipeg, June 27.—The organized farmers of the west and the Farmers' Associations, which are very powerful, are planning to meet Sir Wilfrid Laurier at every point that he stops at in the west.

Monster deputations are being organized already to interview him at various stations. They will ask for Government ownership of terminal elevators. They will ask for a lower tariff and closer trade relations with the United States, and particularly that the duty be removed from agricultural implements.

They also will ask that he give more consideration to the Co-operative Act, which was dropped last session.

The missing ore is valued at $30,000.

The Mystery of The Yellow Room

By GASTON LEROUX

COPYRIGHT, 1908, By BRENTANO'S.

Two light knocks struck the door. Rouletabille opened it. A figure entered. I recognized the concierge whom I had seen when she was being taken to the pavilion for examination. I was surprised, thinking she was still under lock and key. This woman said in a very low tone:

"In the grove of the parquet."

Rouletabille replied, "Thanks." The woman then left. He again turned to me, his look haggard, after having carefully refastened the door, muttering some incomprehensible phrases.

"If the thing is mathematically possible why should it not be humanly? And if it is humanly possible the matter is simply awful."

I interrupted him in his soliloquy.

"Have they set the concierges at liberty, then?" I asked.

"Yes," he replied, "I had them liberated. I needed people I could trust. The woman is thoroughly devoted to me, and her husband would lay down his life for me."

"Oho!" I said. "When will he have occasion to do it?"

"This evening, for this evening I expect the murderer."

"You expect the murderer this evening? Then you know him?"

"I shall know him, but I should be mad to affirm categorically at this moment that I do know him. The mathematical idea I have of the murderer gives results so frightful, so monstrous, that I hope it is still possible that I am mistaken. I hope so with all my heart."

"Five minutes ago you did not know the murderer. How can you say that you expect him this evening?"

"Because I know that he must come."

Rouletabille very slowly filled his pipe and lit it. That meant an interesting story. At that moment we heard some one walking in the gallery and passing before our door. Rouletabille listened. The sound of the footstep died away in the distance.

"Is Frederic Larsan in his room?" I asked, pointing to the partition.

"No," my friend answered. "He went to Paris this morning, still on the scent of Darzac, who also left for Paris. That matter will turn out badly. I expect that M. Darzac will be arrested in the course of the next week. The worst of it is that everything seems to be in league against him—circumstances, things, people. Not an hour passes without bringing some new evidence against him. The examining magistrate is overwhelmed by it and blind."

"Frederic Larsan, however, is not a novice," I said.

"I thought so," said Rouletabille, with a slightly contemptuous turn of his lips. "I fancied he was a much abler man. I had, indeed, a great admiration for him before I got to know his method of working. It's deplorable. He owes his reputation solely to his ability, but he lacks reasoning power. The mathematics of his ideas are very poor."

I looked closely at Rouletabille and could not help smiling on hearing this boy of eighteen talking of a man who has proved to the world that he was the finest police sleuth hound in Europe.

"You smile," he said. "You are wrong. I swear I will outwit him and in a striking way. But I must make haste about it, for he has an enormous start of me, given him by M. Robert Darzac, who is this evening going to increase it still more. Think of it, every time the murderer comes to the chateau M. Darzac by a strange fatality absents himself and refuses to give any account of how he employs his time."

"Every time the assassin comes to the chateau!" I cried. "Has he returned, then?"

"Yes, during that famous night when the strange phenomenon occurred."

I was now going to learn about the astonishing phenomenon to which Rouletabille had made allusion half an hour earlier without giving me any explanation of it. At last, in short, rapid phrases he acquainted me with things which plunged me into a state bordering on complete bewilderment. Indeed, the results of that still unknown science known as hypnotism, for example, were not more inexplicable than the disappearance of the matter of the murderer at the moment when four persons were within touch of him. I speak of hypnotism as I would of electricity, for of the nature of both we are ignorant, and we know little of their laws. I cite these examples because at the time the case appeared to me to be only explicable by the inexplicable—that is to say, by an event outside of known natural laws. And yet if I had had Rouletabille's brain I should, like him, have had a presentiment of the natural explanation, for the most curious thing about all the mysteries of the Glandier case was the natural manner in which he explained them.

I have among the papers that were sent me by the young man after the affair was over a notebook of his, in which a complete account is given of the phenomenon of the disappearance of the "matter" of the assassin and the thoughts to which it gave rise in the mind of my young friend. It is preferable, I think, to give the reader this account rather than to continue to reproduce my conversation with Rouletabille.

CHAPTER XV.

The Trap.

"LAST night, the night between the 29th and the 30th of October," wrote Joseph Rouletabille, "I woke up toward 1 o'clock in the morning. Was it sleeplessness or noise without? The cry of the Bete du Bon Dieu rang out with sinister loudness from the end of the park. I rose and opened the window. Cold wind and rain, opaque darkness, silence. I reclosed my window. Again the sound of the cat's weird cry in the distance. I partly dressed in haste. The weather was too bad for even a cat to be turned out in it. What did it mean, then—that imitating of the mewing of Mother Angenoux's cat so near the chateau? I seized a good sized stick, the only weapon I had, and without making any noise opened my door.

"The gallery into which I went was well lit by a lamp with a reflector. I felt a keen current of air and on turning found the window open at the extreme end of the gallery, which I call the 'off turning' gallery to distinguish it from the 'right' gallery, on to which the apartment of Mlle. Stangerson opened. These two galleries cross each other at right angles. Who had left that window open or who had come to open it? I went to the window and leaned out. Five feet below me there was a sort of terrace over the semicircular projection of a room on the ground floor. One could if one wanted jump from the window on to the terrace and allow oneself to drop from it into the court of the chateau. Whoever had entered by this road had evidently not had a key to the vestibule door. But why should I be thinking of my previous night's attempt with the ladder? Because of the open window, left open perhaps by the negligence of a servant? I reclosed it, smiling at the ease with which I built a drama on the mere suggestion of an open window.

"Again the cry of the Bete du Bon Dieu and then silence. The rain ceased to beat on the window. All in the chateau slept. I walked with infinite precaution on the carpet of the gallery. On reaching the corner of the 'right' gallery I peered round it cautiously. There was another lamp there with a reflector which quite lit up the several objects in it, three chairs, and some pictures hanging on the wall. What was I doing there? Perfect silence reigned throughout. Everything was sunk in repose. What was the instinct that urged me toward Mlle. Stangerson's chamber? Why did a voice within me cry, 'Go on to the chamber of Mlle. Stangerson!' I cast my eyes down upon the carpet on which I was treading and saw that my steps were being directed toward Mlle. Stangerson's chamber by the marks of steps that had already been made there. Yes, on the carpet were traces of footsteps stained with mud leading to the chamber of Mlle. Stangerson. Horror, horror! I recognized in those footprints the impression of the neat boots of the murderer. He had come, then, from without in this wretched night. If you could descend from the gallery by way of the window, by means of the terrace, then you could get into the chateau by the same means.

"The murderer was still in the chateau, for here were marks as of returning footsteps. He had entered by the open window at the extremity of the 'off turning' gallery; he had passed Frederic Larsan's door and mine, had turned to the right and had entered Mlle. Stangerson's room. I am before the door of her anteroom. It is open. I push it without making the least noise. Under the door of the room itself I see a streak of light. I listen. No sound, not even of breathing. Ah, if I only knew what was passing in the silence that is behind that door! I find the door locked and the key turned on the inner side. And the murderer is there perhaps. He must be there. Will he escape this time? All depends on me. I must be calm, and above all I must make no false steps. I must see into that room. I can enter it by Mlle. Stangerson's drawing room. But to do that I should have to cross her boudoir, and while I am there the murderer may escape by the gallery door, the door in front of which I am now standing.

"I am sure that no other crime is being committed on this night, for there is complete silence in the boudoir, where two nurses are taking care of Mlle. Stangerson until she is restored to health.

"As I am almost sure that the murderer is there, why do I not at once give the alarm? The murderer may perhaps escape, but perhaps I may be able to save Mlle. Stangerson's life. Suppose the murderer on this occasion is not here to murder? The door has been opened to allow him to enter—by whom? And it has been refastened—by whom? Mlle. Stangerson shuts herself up in her apartment with her nurses every night. Who turned the key of that chamber to allow the murderer to enter? The nurses, two faithful domestics? The old chambermaid, Sylvia? It is very improbable. Besides, they slept in the boudoir, and Mlle. Stangerson, very nervous and careful, M. Robert Darzac told me, sees to her own safety since she has been well enough to move about in her room, which I have not yet seen her leave. This nervousness and sudden care on her part, which had struck M. Darzac, had given me also food for thought. At the time of the crime in the yellow room there can be no doubt that she expected the murderer. Was he expected this night? Was it she herself who had opened her door to him? Had she some reason for doing so? Was she obliged to do it? Was it a meeting for purposes of crime? Certainly it was not a lover's meeting, for I believe Mlle. Stangerson adores M. Darzac.

"It is possible that there was some reason for the awful silence. My intervention might do more harm than good. How could I tell? How could I know I might not any moment cause another crime? If I could only see and know without breaking that silence.

"I left the anteroom and descended the central stairs to the vestibule and as silently as possible made my way to the little room on the ground floor where Daddy Jacques had been sleeping since the attack made at the pavilion.

"I found him dressed, his eyes wide open, almost haggard. He did not seem surprised to see me. He told me that he had got up because he had heard the cry of the Bete du Bon Dieu and because he had heard footsteps in the park close to his window, out of which he had looked and just then had seen a black shadow pass by. I asked him whether he had a firearm of any kind. No, he no longer kept one since the examining magistrate had taken his revolver from him. We went out together by a little back door into the park and stole along the chateau to the point which is just below Mlle. Stangerson's window.

"I placed Daddy Jacques against the wall, ordering him not to stir from the spot, while I, taking advantage of a moment when the moon was hidden by a cloud, moved to the front of the window out of the patch of light which came from it, for the window was half open. If I could only know what was passing in that silent chamber! I returned to Daddy Jacques and whispered the word 'ladder' in his ear. At first I had thought of the tree which a week ago served me for an observatory, but I immediately saw that from the way the window was half opened I should not be able to see from that point of view anything that was passing in the room, and I wanted not only to see, but to hear, and to act.

"Greatly agitated, almost trembling, Daddy Jacques disappeared for a moment and returned without the ladder but making signs to me with his arms as signals to me to come quickly to him. When I got near him he gasped, 'Come!'

"He led me round the chateau, past the donjon. Arrived there, he said:

"'I went to the donjon in search of my ladder, and in the lower part of the donjon which serves me and the gardener for a lumber room I found the door open and the ladder gone. On coming out that's what I caught sight of by the light of the moon.'

"And he pointed to the farther end of the chateau, where a ladder stood resting against the stone brackets supporting the terrace, under the window which I had found open. The projection of the terrace had prevented my seeing it. Thanks to that ladder, it was quite easy to get into the 'off turning' gallery of the first floor, and I had no doubt of it having been the road taken by the unknown.

"We ran to the ladder, but at the moment of reaching it Daddy Jacques drew my attention to the half open door of the little semicircular room situated under the terrace at the extremity of the right wing of the chateau, having the terrace for its roof. Daddy Jacques pushed the door open a little farther and looked in.

"'He's not there!' he whispered.

"'Who is not there?'

"'The forest keeper.'

"With his lips once more to my ear he added:

"'Do you know that he has slept in the upper room of the donjon ever since it was restored?' And with the same gesture he pointed to the half open door, the ladder, the terrace and the window in the 'off turning' gallery, which a little while before I had reclosed.

"What were my thoughts then? I had no time to think. I felt more than I thought.

"Evidently I felt if the forest keeper is up there in the chamber (I say if because at this moment, apart from the presence of the ladder and his vacant room, there are no evidences which permit me even to suspect him)—if he is there he has been obliged to pass by the ladder, and the rooms which lie behind his in his new lodging are occupied by the family of the steward and by the cook and by the kitchens, which bar the way by the vestibule to the interior of the chateau. And if he had been there during the evening on any pretext it would have been easy for him to go into the gallery and see that the window could be simply pushed open from the outside. This question of the unfastened window easily narrowed the field of search for the murderer. He must belong to the house unless he had an accomplice, which I do not believe he had; unless—unless Mlle. Stangerson herself had seen that that window was not fastened from the inside. But, then, what could be the frightful secret which put her under the necessity of doing away with obstacles that separated her from the murderer?

"I seized hold of the ladder, and we returned to the back of the chateau to see if the window of the chamber was still half open. The blind was drawn, but did not join and allowed a bright stream of light to escape and fall upon the path at our feet. I planted the ladder under the window. I am almost sure that I made no noise, and while Daddy Jacques remained at the foot of the ladder I mounted it very quietly, my stout stick in my hand. I held my breath and lifted my feet with the greatest care. Suddenly a heavy cloud discharged itself at that moment in a fresh downpour of rain.

"At the same instant the sinister cry of the Bete du Bon Dieu arrested me in my ascent. It seemed to me to have come from close by me, only a few yards away. Was the cry a signal? Had some accomplice of the man seen me on the ladder? Would the cry bring the man to the window? Perhaps. Ah, there he was at the window! I felt his head above me. I heard the sound of his breath! I could not look up toward him. The least movement of my head and I might be lost. Would he see me? Would he peer into the darkness? No; he went away. He had seen nothing. I felt, rather than heard him moving on tiptoe in the room, and I mounted a few steps higher. My head reached to the level of the window sill; my forehead rose above it; my eyes looked between the opening in the blinds, and I saw—

"A man seated at Mlle. Stangerson's little desk writing. His back was turned toward me. A candle was lit before him, and he bent over the flame, the light from it projecting shapeless shadows. I saw nothing but a monstrous, stooping back.

"Mlle. Stangerson herself was not there! Her bed had not been lain on! Where, then, was she sleeping that night? Doubtless in the side room with her women. Perhaps this was but a guess. I must content myself with the joy of finding the man alone. I must be calm to prepare my trap.

"But who, then, is this man writing there before my eyes, seated at the desk, as if he were in his own home? If there had not been that ladder under the window, if there had not been those footprints on the carpet in the gallery, if there had not been that open window, I might have been led to think that this man had a right to be there and that he was there as a matter of course and for reasons about which as yet I knew nothing. But there was no doubt that this mysterious unknown was the man of the yellow room, the man to whose murderous assault Mlle. Stangerson without denouncing him had had to submit. If I could but see his face! Surprise and capture him!

"If I spring into the room at this moment he will escape by the right hand door opening into the boudoir, or, crossing the drawing room, he will reach the gallery and I shall lose him. I have him now, and in five minutes more he'll be safer than if I had him in a cage. What is he doing there, alone in Mlle. Stangerson's room? What is he writing? I descend and place the ladder on the ground. Daddy Jacques follows me. We re-enter the chateau. I send Daddy Jacques to wake M. Stangerson and instruct him to await my coming in Mlle. Stangerson's room and to say nothing definite to him before my arrival. I will go and awaken Frederic Larsan. It's a bore to have to do it, for I should have liked to work alone and to have carried off all the honors of this affair myself right under the very nose of the sleeping detective. But Daddy Jacques and M. Stangerson are old men, and I am not yet fully developed. I might not be strong enough. Larsan is used to wrestling and putting on the handcuffs. He opened his eyes, swollen with sleep, ready to send me flying without in the least believing in my reporter's fancies. I had to assure him that the man was there.

"'That's strange,' he said. 'I thought I left him this afternoon in Paris.'

"He dressed himself in haste and armed himself with a revolver. We stole quietly into the gallery.

"'Where is he?' Larsan asked.

"'In Mlle. Stangerson's room.'

"'And Mlle. Stangerson?'

"'She is not in there.'

"'Let's go in.'

"'Don't go there. On the least alarm the man will escape. He has four ways by which to do it—the door, the window, the boudoir or the room in which the women are sleeping.'

"'I'll draw him from below.'

"'And if you fail? If you only succeed in wounding him he'll escape again without reckoning that he is certainly armed. No; let me direct the expedition, and I'll answer for everything.'

"'As you like,' he replied, with fairly good grace.

"Then after satisfying myself that all the windows of the two galleries were thoroughly secure I placed Frederic Larsan at the end of the 'off turning' gallery, before the window which I had found open and had reclosed.

"'Under no consideration,' I said to him, 'must you stir from this post till I call you. The chances are even that the man when he is pursued will return to this window and try to save himself that way, for it is by that way he came in and made a way ready for his flight. You have a dangerous post.'

"'What will be yours?' asked Fred.

"'I shall spring into the room and knock him over for you.'

"'Take my revolver,' said Fred, 'and I'll take your stick.'

"'Thanks,' I said. 'You are a brave man.'

"I accepted his offer. I was going to be alone with the man in the room writing and was really thankful to have the weapon.

"I left Fred, having posted him at the window, and, with the greatest precaution, went toward M. Stangerson's apartment in the left wing of the chateau. I found him with Daddy Jacques, who had faithfully obeyed my directions, confining himself to asking his master to dress as quickly as possible. In a few words I explained to M. Stangerson what was passing. He armed himself with a revolver, followed me, and we were all three speedily in the gallery. Since I had seen the murderer seated at the desk ten minutes had elapsed. M. Stangerson wished to spring upon the assassin at once and kill him. I made him understand that, above all, he must not miss him.

WARNED YOUNG MEN NOT TO FOLLOW HIS EXAMPLE

Confession of Robert Henderson Read in St. John's Church by Rev. Canon Davidson—Youth Didn't Fear Death and Life Had Been in Danger Many Times

At St. John's church last night Rev. Canon Davidson read extracts from a self-written confession by Robert Henderson, the youth who was hanged at the Peterborough jail on Thursday for the murder of Margaret McPherson. The Confession is written in excellent English and shows Henderson to have been a young man of literary ability and good education, and one who has travelled very extensively.

A note of warning not to follow his example is sounded to all other young men.

Henderson, in the paper, stated he didn't fear death and said he had been in danger of his life many times, but had experienced no fear.

DOWN TO COBOURG TOWN WENT THE PRINTERS

The men were cool and collected,
The ladies, happy, though hot;
But not one of them ever regretted
Their trip to that lake shore spot.

It is over. The Printers' picnic for 1910, has come and gone.

Years hence the little tots who to-day prattle and dance on their printer fathers knee, will remember the story of when papa went to Cobourg picnicking, and they in turn will repeat the same sweet story to their children and their children's children, yea even unto the third and fourth generation. Printers' lives are largely made up of memories, and they shall live through the coming years to look back to June 25th, 1910, as a sunny spot amid the lights and shadows of their past. Hold! enough.

At 1.40 the train left the Grand Trunk station, bearing one of the happiest and largest crowds of pleasure seekers that has left Peterborough this season.

Cobourg was reached at 3.10, and those who were wealthy enough hired vehicles to drive into the city.

As the afternoon was well advanced, no delays were made by the energetic committee on charge in running off the races. The whole party made for the ball grounds expecting to witness an amateur game of baseball between the Review and Examiner, but this did not materialize.

The remainder of the events were next run off.

The boy's race under fifteen, was won by Jack Cooke, with Hector Orr a close second.

Lilian Wilson was first and Madeline Wyldbur second in the girl's race, fifteen years and under.

The boat race was won by Stanley Richardson; second, Hector Orr.

Considerable difficulty was experienced in getting entries for the young ladies race and also the married ladies.

As this reluctance on their part became noticeable, it was put down to the fact that the ladies did not wish to show their speed or class.

Miss Bessie Crowe, of the Examiner won from a field of three, however, in the unmarried ladies' race, and Mrs. Crowe was successful in waltzing home first in the married ladies.

But talk about your speed, H. Smith certainly showed it in the 100 yards' open race for men, by leading a number of the pick of Peterborough's printer sprinters home by a good ten yards.

The pie-eating contest was the next feature.

The Review Office boy covered himself with pie and glory by displaying remarkable powers of consumption. There was some doubt as to his claim to the victory in this contest as considerable of the contents of the pie adhered to his face, and required the aid of the lake water to be removed.

However, he won the prize, and Ira Baker was a proud and full boy for the remainder of the day.

The printers and reporters' race combined was won by Egbert Kelly, reporter of the Evening Examiner in regular Bobby Kerr style. He has a splendid leg act on.

The printers' race only was won by Mr. Myland, another Examiner typesetter, whose length of limb enabled him to cover long distances at each stride. With proper training and plenty of fattening food Mr. Myland should shine in the ranks of record-holders.

A three-legged race was put on and won easily by Messrs. Kelly and Tyce.

There was some doubt as to the winner of the girls' race and it was run over again, and won by Ethel Skitch.

The boy's race over fifteen completed the list of races for the day, and Norman McIntosh was the lucky one.

After the races and sports the sources of amusement became very much diversified, and the crowd began to scatter.

Mr. Paxman's roosters unfortunately had tonsilitis and their owner, considered it best for their health to leave them at home.

Anyone wishing to hear them, however, may be accommodated by applying at Mr. Paxman's residence. A cordial welcome is extended to all.

The ferry which was docked when the excursionists arrived was inspected by quite a number of the visitors many of whom had not before seen it.

Canon Stagg, of the Anglican church, very kindly consented to give the party the pleasure of hearing the chimes.

For over a half an hour some old familiar tunes were rung out, and no doubt the hearing of these chimes, will cause the chimes fund for St. John's church to take on increased proportions.

When supper time arrived those who came away without baskets, retired to the hotels and restaurants for supper.

And now dim twilight began to settle down upon Cobourg, the sun fell, and all the land was dark.

Young men and maidens sought out the quiet nooks, there to rest till train time.

Many of the Peterborough young men apparently made decided hits with the Cobourg girls. It was easy for the girls to distinguish the visitors by their badges.

Especial mention must be made of the kindness of the mayor of Cobourg, who saw to it that the visitors lacked nothing which would hinder the enjoyment of the excursion.

Hot water was provided on the grounds also.

The train pulled out from the Cobourg station at 9.30, bearing a satisfied party of pleasure-seekers, tired and happy and unanimous in their decision that the Printers' Picnic of 1910, would be hard to beat.

Peterborough was reached about 11.30.

The set of dishes that were to be awarded to the person holding the lucky number, became the property of Mr. David McGregor, No. 221 doing the trick.

LAUNCH RACES WILL BE AN INTERESTING FEATURE

A big feature of the T.A.S. picnic is the motor boat races.

This year the interest in the launch events is greater than ever and there will be some keen racing between runabouts of the water.

For the open events the probable entries are Goulet's "Sivoy," Potvin's "Iola," Talbot's 'The Talbot,' and English's launch in the five-horse power race; Banks' "Merry Widow," Barrie's "Gilbar," Osborne's 'The Witch,' Lacroque's "Kooty."

The prizes for all the events will be substantial and better than on any other occasion.

CAPITAL STOCK OF GEORGE MATTHEWS CO. LTD, DOUBLED

In the Canada Gazette, of Saturday appears the notice of the increasing of the capital stock of the George Matthews Company, Limited, from the sum of five hundred thousand dollars to the sum of one million dollars, such increase to consist of five thousand shares of one hundred dollars each.

Mr. Matthews stated to the Review this morning, that while he would like to see extensions made here difficulties in the way could not be overcome, the surrounding population not being large enough and conditions not being favorable for the disposition of the offal.

The extensions will be made at Hull or Brantford, but of course, the present plant will, be operated as in the past.

ARRANGEMENTS IN CONNECTION WITH T.A.S. PICNIC, JULY 1st

A meeting of the committee in charge of the T.A.S. picnic to T.A.S. Park on July 1st, was held yesterday afternoon at St. Alphonse's Lyceum.

Commencing Wednesday morning, tickets will be on sale at Lane & Eane's Merrill & Meredith's, William Collins', Ashburnham, and on the Auburn, Jackson Park and Edison street cars. Ticket sellers will also be stationed at the corner of Hunter and George, Charlotte and George, Perry and George, and at the Street Railway wharf.

The Booth Committee visited the grounds on Saturday and put up a 120-foot dining table and a booth, and also cleared the grounds. The committee will go down this afternoon to make further arrangements.

The tents will be pitched the day before the excursion.

$100 Subscription

During the service at St. John's church last evening Rev. Canon Davidson noted the handsome subscription of one hundred dollars from Mr. Herbert Collingham, of Winnipeg, for the chimes fund.

A PROMINENT CITIZEN DIES AT HIS OFFICE

Mr. P. Downham, 417 Stewart street, proprietor of the Peterborough Creamery, died at five o'clock Saturday afternoon, from heart failure.

As yet the wide circle of friends and acquaintances can scarcely relize that one whom they have been accustomed to meet in both business and social relations from day to day has been called away.

Mr. Downham appeared to be in his usual health up till Saturday, when he complained of a pain in his chest. It was not considered alarming, however, and in the afternoon, in company with some other gentlemen, he visited the lift lock in an automobile, returning about three p.m.

At 5 o'clock he was in the office of his creamery on Aylmer street, and while in the act of answering the telephone, he was seized with heart failure, sank to the floor and expired in less than five minytes.

Mr. Hunter, the milk vendor, and a couple of others were in the office at the time. Mr. Hunter hurriedly summoned Dr. Greer, who did all he could for the stricken man, but without success.

Mr. Downham had been engaged in the creamery business practically all his life.

Previous to coming to Peterborough, he was proprietor of a plant in St. Thomas. After successfully conducting this for some years he disposed of it and took a trip to the Old Country, and on his return came to Peterborough, and set up in business. For the past six years he was very successful and did a large wholesale business in cream and butter, shipping to all of the large firms in Ontario.

In religion the late Mr. Downham was a Baptit, and since coming to Peterborough has been a faithful and prominent deacon of Murray-st. Baptist church.

The body was shipped to London, Ont., on the early C.P.R. train to-day for interment and was accompanied by Mrs. Downham.

PASTOR OF GEORGE STREET PREACHED FAREWELL SERMONS

Rev. E. A. Pearson Spoke of the Pleasant Character of His Pastorate in Peterborough—Flower Sunday at the Church—Rev. H. L. Roberts Will be Here Temporarily.

George street church yesterday was rendered specially attractive by beautiful flowers and splendid sermons.

It was Flower Sunday and also the farewell appearance of Rev. E. A. Pearson, pastor of the church.

The platform of the church was decorated for the day with four pillars of flowers, the pillars being illuminated with electric lights.

The Sabbath school in the afternoon was withdrawn.

At the evening service the pastor preached from the same text as he did on the first Sunday of his pastroate of the church, taking as his text Philippians, 1st chapter, 21st verse; "For me to live is Christ, and to to die is gain."

THE PASTOR'S FAREWELL.

Dividing the text into four divisions, namely, that God is the source, sustainer, product and aim of life, the pastor dwelt forcibly on each part and showed their connectio with our lives each day.

In his farewell words Mr. Pearson appeared to be deeply affected.

"I have every reason to be thankful," he said, "to you who have listened to the message proclaimed from this pulpit during my pastorate, and I have nothing but gratitude for you. I thank you all for your kindness to me, and I will always remember the congregation and religious bodies connected with George street church."

After the sermon Mr. D. W. Dumble spoke briefly on the splendid work performed by the pastor during his pastorate of three years, and wished him every success in his new field.

Speaking for the trustee board of the church, he said that it was due Rev. Mr. Pearson to explain why he was going away at the close of the three year term when the routine of the church permitted a fourth year. It was not that the officials of the church had not thought of that. Most glady would they have had Mr. Pearson stay, but in the arrangement of pulpits at this juncture, the church could not secure the services of a pastor for the next three years who would be at liberty to come, and whom they had before tried to secure. It was felt that as the larger opportunity was open for Mr. Pearson to go to Hamilton, that nothing should be done to interfere. It was a tangible testimonial to his excellence as a pastor and preacher that he had been selected for the responsible position. In parting with the late pastor the trustee board did so with reluctance. Ever faithful, ever unswerving in his work his absence would be felt within the church, Sunday school and the several bodies and societies of the church. He felt that during this pastorate Rev. Mr. Pearson had thoroughly well satisfied the people, and in terms most optomistic Mr. Dumble begged to transfer to Rev. Mr. Pearson the wishes, hopes and feelings of the congregation. It was an unusual step to express his own and, as he knew, the views of others, in this way, but he was sure the circumstances warranted him in so doing.

REV. MR. COUCH ILL.

The pulpit of George street church during his next four Sunday will be occupied by Rev. H. L. Roberts, a probationer, now in attendance at Victoria College.

Rev. Mr. Couch, who will succeed Mr. Pearson, is scarcely strong enough, after his recent illness, to occupy the pulpit, and was given his holidays before coming to Peterborough.

A MESSAGE FROM THE GALLOWS AND ITS SIGNIFICANCE

The Rev. W. C. Riddiford, of the Park St. Baptist church, took for his subject last night, "A Message from the Gallows."

He based his remarks upon Mathew 27:5, "And he cast down the pieces of silver in the temple and departed, and went and hanged himself."

The sermon was a character study of Judas, and the preacher introduced his message with a very touching reference to the untimely death, though perfectly justified, of the young man who this week went the way of sin. "For after all," he remarked, "the wages of sin is death," whether by the gallows or on a flowery bed of ease. Sin kills both body and soul. The relentless monster has no mercy.

"In a lonely grave, amidst the long unkempt grass plot, known as the potters' field, lies the mortal remains of a misguided youth; the victim and dupe of sin and Satan.

A GRIEF STRICKEN MOTHER.

At home, in far-away England, sits mother lonely, sick and heart-broken over the sad fate of her wandering, wayward, yet ever darling boy, for whom she suffered the pangs of motherhood, and risked her life to give him birth.

Could there be a sadder tragedy, unless it be the tragedy of Calvery?

Let us hope that the poor lad's dying prayer was answered, and that the same forgiving Jesus, the man of sorrows, and acquainted with griefs that spoke peace to the dying thief-murderer on the cross, heard his prayer, and received his spirit into the realms of everlasting bliss, and that both the murderer and his aged victim, sitting together around "The great while throne, shall forget and forgive forever, the sad event, which sent both of them into eternity's morning before their time.

COMMENDABLE SYMPATHY.

I was strangely touched by the milk of human kindness that condescended last Thursday, or Decoration Day, to pour itself out, even on that poor lad's grave. It was just what mother would have done, had she been there. For he was, after all, some mother's darling."

In graphic sentences the minister of Park St. drew out the various points of the downward course of Judas, which started with avarice, and ended with suicide by hanging himself.

"Beware of the materialistic sirens that would draw your feet from the path of right, and blast forever your hope of eternal life. For the wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ, our Lord."

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

The Review does not hold itself responsible for opinions expressed by its correspondents

To the Editor of the Review.

Sir,—As a former school-mate, and one who knows of her high qualifications to express an opinion upon such matters, I feel constrained to add my quota of praise to Mrs. Kendrey for her well aimed and timely remarks upon the maudlin sentimentality of those who strew the grave of the unfortunate Henderson with flowers.

The murder also brings to mind the absurdity of the doctrine that a murderer has time to repent and receive the ministrations of the church and is enabled to swing gracefully off the scaffold int oheaven, while his unfortunate victim, however good, being struck down without a moment's warning, and no time for reformation, would be consigned to a less favored place.

Yours, &c.,
CONSISTENCY.

To the Editor of the Review.

Sir,—Oh! Mr. Editor, if you only knew how weary and footsore we are at ten o'clock on a hot Saturday night like last Saturday night you would help the merchants to organize an earlier closing movement. It is all the fault of city customers, who can well enough manage to come earlier. In Toronto and Hamilton and places like them the big stores close at not later than six o'clock every day, some days at five, and every Saturday at one. It's different in Peterborough. We girls wouldn't mind it so much in cool weather, but in hot weather it is simply killing. Some customers are very thoughtful, more are thoughtless, and some are downright selfish. I wish you would help us out, Mr. Editor.

Yours sincerely,
ONE OF THEM.

FAMOUS EXITS.

How Great Statesmen Have Left the Scene of Activities.

When, some weeks ago, Mr. Chamberlain entered the British House of Commons from behind the Speaker's chair, and, supported on each side, made his feeble way to the Clerk's table to take the Parliamentary oath, it must have occurred to many of the silent and awed spectators of this dramatic scene that the great gladiator of the past was taking his last look at the arena in which for so many years he had been the doughtiest fighter.

Just sixteen years earlier a still greater statesman had said farewell to the Chamber, of which he had for more than sixty years been such a distinguished ornament. Mr. Gladstone had made his last speech, in a voice as ringing and with a passion as intense as in the days of his youth. The Speaker had left the chair; and as the veteran was making his way out of the House for the last time, he stood for a moment beneath the Speaker's chair, gave one swift, comprehensive glance of those eagle eyes of his around the scene of so many past triumphs, and then, squaring his shoulders, strode grimly and resolutely out of the Chamber.

Thirteen years earlier Gladstone's great rival, Disraeli, made his last bow on the political stage in the House of Lords, at the close of a speech against the evacuation of Candahar by British troops. Broken man as he was, there was no trace of weakness or faltering in this farewell effort of oratory. There was much of the old fire and the picturesque eloquence of his prime. "The key of India is in London," he concluded. "The majesty of Sovereignty, the spirit and vigor of your Parliaments, the inexhaustible resources of a free, an ingenious, and a determined people—these are the keys of India." And as the old statesman resumed his seat, the peers burst into one of those rare rounds of applause which showed that they had been strangely moved. Six weeks later the great voice was stilled in death.

The farewell words of the "great Earl of Derby," in the House of Lords on June 17, 1869, were among the most eloquent and impressive the "Rupert of Debate" ever delivered. "My lords," he said, in his peroration, "I am now an old man, and, like many of your lordships, I have now passed the three-score years and ten. My official life is entirely closed, my political life is nearly so, and in the course of nature my natural life cannot now be long." In the following October the curtain had been rung down on the last scene of all.

Palmerston's farewell speech was delivered on May 23, 1865, in the sixteenth Parliament in which he had sat. It was a speech of considerable humor, ingenuity, and raillery on the leakage of Cabinet secrets; and probably none who enjoyed the Grand Old Man's delicate humor (he was so at that time), full of the effervescence of youth, dreamed that the House would never hear his voice again.

Cobden's last words in the Commons, delivered on July 22, 1864, were an eloquent condemnation of the extension of Government manufactures, and concluded thus: "Our fortunes as a Government and nation are indissolubly united, and we will rise or fall, flourish or fade together, according to the energy, enterprise and ability of the great body of the manufacturing and industrious community."

When Peel rose to speak in the Commons at one o'clock on Saturday morning, June 28, 1850, those who listened to his eloquent condemnation of Palmerston's foreign policy would have been horrified if they had known that the stately presence would be merged in death within four days. After the speech Peel went for his usual ride in Hyde Park; on Constitution Hill he was thrown violently from his horse, and on the following Tuesday night he drew his last breath.

Spencer Perceval's farewell speech was made three days before he was brutally murdered, in the Lobby of the House, by the madman, Bellingham; and O'Connell's was "a performance in dumb show; a feeble old man muttering before a table"—a pitiful travesty of the giant whose superb eloquence and rollicking humor had, in past years, made the Commons shake with applause or rock with laughter.

But no statesman has made such a dramatic and tragic last appearance in Parliament as that of the great Earl of Chatham, who was carried to the House of Lords from his deathbed, haggard and emaciated, and wrapped in flannels. As he spoke, he leant heavily on his crutch. "I am an old man," he said, feebly and pantingly. "I have one foot—more than one foot in the grave. I have risen from my bed to stand up in the cause of my country, perhaps never again to speak in this House."

After a few more painful disjointed words he fell back on his seat, apparently dying, and was carried out of the chamber.

R. B. Stack, out on $10,000 bail at Montreal, on a charge of kidnapping his son, has forfeited his bail because of failure to appear in court.

Balm of Gilead.

The real balm of Gilead is the dried juice of a low scrub which grows in Syria. It is very valuable and scarce, for the amount of balm yielded by one shrub never exceeded sixty drops a day. According to Josephus, the balm or balsam of Gilead was one of the presents given by the Queen of Sheba to King Solomon. The ancient Jewish physicians prescribed it evidently for dyspepsia and melancholia.

How They Did It.

A man who had traveled much in Africa told his friends on his return that he and his servant had on an occasion made fifty Arabs run. All who heard the story were amazed.

"How did you manage it?" asked one.

"Oh, it was nothing very wonderful," replied the traveler. "We ran, and they ran after us."

Spinach derives its name from the Spanish monks, who first used it during fast days.

A Descendant of "Jack Horner."

Mrs. Herbert Gladstone, the wife of the newly appointed Governor-General of the South African Union, is in many respects one of the most remarkable women of the highest official circle in England. In the eyes of the English-speaking youth of South Africa, not the least of this brilliant lady's claims to distinction lies in the fact, that through her father, the late Right Hon. Sir Richard Horner Paget, she is actually a descendant of "Little Jack Horner," of Christmas pie notoriety. This hero of the popular nursery rhyme was a steward of Glastonbury Abbey in 1553, and all visitors to the celebrated fane are shown Jack Horner's tomb, etc., etc. Sir Richard Horner Paget, Mrs. Gladstone's father, who in his younger days was for some years in Canada on service with his regiment, H. M. 66th Foot, was one of the great country squires of England, representing various divisions of his native county, Somersetshire, in the House of Commons from 1865 to 1895. He served for a time in the Salisbury Cabinet and was created a baronet in 1886. Mrs. Gladstone is a handsome and charming woman of the characteristic English type, tall, fair and with a fresh complexion, the latter a result of constant outdoor exercise riding, driving, walking, gardening, etc. She is considered one of the most brilliant conversationalists in English society and is an excellent public speaker, often exercising the latter talent at parochial gatherings, school meetings, etc. She is a gifted pianiste and is fond of accompanying her husband, who, having a pleasant and well-trained tenor voice, is often called upon to sing. Her special hobby is gardening, and she is taking a large stock of gardening tools, seeds, etc., to South Africa.

RESERVE POWER.

Value of a Surplus of Energy in the Battle of Life.

In every department of life physical, mental and moral reserves are of incalculable value. Many people work so hard that they exhaust their physical energies each day. They make it a matter of conscience to wade through just as much work as possible every day, no matter how painfully it is done, not realizing the tremendous value of keeping oneself vigorous, buoyant.

No life can be vigorous, if it is not kept fresh, responsive, by great physical and mental reserves. As hibernating animals, like the bear, in cold climates sustain life through the winter wholly upon the reserve fat and nutriment stored up in the tissues, so patients who have splendid physical reserves and resisting power are carried through severe sickness and sustained through severe illnesses by this reserve surplus, stored up vital power, while those who lack it, those who have dissipated it in abnormal living and excesses, often lose their lives even in much less severe illnesses.

Great business men accomplish marvels with their reserves. Many of them work but a few hours a day, but they have such tremendous physical reserves and so much stored up mental energy that they are able to accomplish wonders in a short time because of their ability to work with great intensity and powerful concentration.

People who keep their physical and mental surplus drawn down very low by working a great many hours and almost never taking vacations, who do not fill their reserve reservoir by frequent vacations and by a lot of recreation and play, do not work with anything like the freshness and mental vigor of those who work fewer hours and constantly accumulate great reserve power.

There comes into every life worth while a time when success will turn upon the reserve power. It is then a question of how long your stored up energy will enable you to hold out. There will often arise emergencies when your success will depend upon how much fight there is in you.

Sunday School "Howlers."

A recent set of Sunday school examination papers, contained the following interesting explanations of the words "mote," and "hypocrites":

"A mote is the article the Jews wore next their skin."

"There is a lady in our street who kills herself to get to church Sunday morning and evening, but on Monday (washing day) she is out at the back calling names to her neighbors for all she is worth. This is proper hypocritism."

The Golden Rule was not always understood, and where understood was not always approved:

"The Golden Rule means, if anybody puts a beam in our eye, we must only put a mote in his."

"This rule would make the world very good, but we would soon get tired of it. A little sorrow is good for us."

"This rule of life I think would not be very satisfactory, for if a man struck you and killed you, how could you obey this rule!"

"When a boy at school asks you for what is not yours, give it to him."

No scandal about John the Baptist was really meant by the statement:

"John the Baptist went into the wilderness, where he led a wild life."

A Swimming Record.

Not long ago a tramp beat all known records by swimming twenty-seven miles in thirty minutes. The feat was not undertaken voluntarily. The hobo merely tried to steal a ride from St. Louis to Chicago on the rear of a locomotive tender. When the train started he fell over backward through the open manhole into the water tank. The noise of the train drowned his cries for help, and he was obliged to swim until the first stop was reached at Alton. When taken out he was nearly dead, but the engineer was so unfeeling as to call his attention to the fact that the water was only four feet deep and he might have stood up. The conductor, equally unfeeling, asked him for his ticket, but the hobo replied that he had come not by rail, but by water.

Could Do Better.

The lecture was on the economics of Nature and showed that her great destructive powers were used only to transform the elements into other channels.

"To illustrate," said the professor, "there is in one of the Pacific islands a volcano which has for sixteen years been pouring molten lava into the ocean over a precipice 400 feet high and eleven miles long. Eggs are boiled in the open sea twenty-two miles away."

"My goodness," cried a feminine voice in the audience, "what a big pan and what a waste of fire and water and fuss over a little plain cooking!"

A Magnificent Vessel.

In 268 B. C. Archimedes devised a marvelous ship for Hiero of Syracuse. Her three lofty masts had been brought from Britain. Luxuriously fitted sleeping apartments abounded, and one of her banqueting halls was paved with agate and costly Sicilian stone. Other floors were cunningly inlaid with scenes from the "Iliad." Stables for many horses, ponds stocked with live fish, gardens watered by artificial rivulets and hot baths were provided for use or amusement.

Tissot Corrected.

A visitor asked the late James Tissot one day whether the picture he was at work on was intended to illustrate the time of Christ. The artist replied in the affirmative. "Then," said the visitor, "permit me to call your attention to an error. Aloes such as you have in your picture did not exist in the Mediterranean region till after the conquest of Mexico by Spain." Tissot promptly took his brush and altered his picture.

Immense Losses by Fires.

Fort William, June 25.—Millions of dollars' worth of damage has been caused by forest fires in the Atikokan district, where J. D. McArthur's lumber mill was destroyed by fire early in the week. In addition to the mill, about 500,000 feet of his lumber was destroyed. Two and a half miles west of Atikokan a million and a half dollars' damage was done through the burning of timber berth No. 61, forty-one miles square in extent, the property of the F. Wayerhauser Co. of St. Paul.

The Rate Portage Lumber Co. of Eye River, 14 miles west of Atikokan, lost all their dams, and this rendered the company unable to run drives. Yesterday morning this firm also lost its camps and a large amount of standing timber.

The Northern Construction Co.'s camps have also been destroyed. These people are the largest lumber operators in the district, and employ in their camps from 500 to 600 men.

The fire is raging practically all the way from Atikokan to Fort Frances, and in some cases runs to a depth of fifteen miles from the C.N.R. track. The principal timber in the burned area is red jack, pine and white pine.

No Influence Used.

Brockville, June 25.—To settle the ownership of $500, Judge Reynolds heard the evidence in the County Court in an action brought by Mrs. P. Finn against the St. Vincent de Paul Hospital of this town.

Finn died leaving $1,000 to his wife, the amount of a policy held in a fraternal society. She was reminded by Rev. Dean Murray, parish priest, of an alleged contract entered into with her husband, whom she married in the hospital on his deathbed, whereby she was to hand over $500 to the hospital. The woman consented, and the necessary papers were drawn up and signed. Before the money was paid over she repudiated the transaction, on the ground of undue influence having been exercised over her by the priest. She also denied then, and in court, the agreement with her husband regarding a division of the money. The judge held that a contract was made and that no undue influence was used by the priest who, with other officials of the hospital, was sworn. Judgment was given accordingly for the defendants, which will be appealed.

Suffocated In Odd Way.

St. Thomas, June 25.—Mrs. James L. McLaren, wife of a cattle buyer, was found suffocated in her home at Highgate, Thursday evening, in a mysterious manner. Neighbors saw smoke coming from the place, and found it on fire. Closer investigation showed the fire to be in a clothes' closet, and the lifeless body of Mrs. McLaren was lying across a trunk. It is thought that she was in search of some articles of clothing in the closet, and lighted a match, which set fire to the contents.

Mrs. McLaren was suffocated to death before she could extinguish the blaze, and escape from the room. Her face and hands were badly burned. Mr. McLaren was not at home at the time.

Washington, D.C., June 25.—Confining the expenditure to $10,000, the Senate yesterday adopted the joint resolution originating in the House authorizing the appointment of a commission for the promotion of universal peace. The commission is to consist of five members and it to be appointed by the President.

Sir Mackenzie Corrects.

Belleville, June 25.—The Belleville Intelligencer, his own paper, replies to certain papers which have criticized Sir Mackenzie Bowell for his utterances at Trenton. The Intelligencer says Sir Mackenzie has been misreported. His remarks about Mr. Doherty, it says, were only made in a general way and did not reflect on anybody.

Ottawa Debentures.

Ottawa, June 25.—City Treasurer Ellis is advertising the sale of city debentures, bearing interest at four per cent. The bids will be received up to September 2, and the treasurer hopes to realize par on the sale. The bonds run for twenty and thirty year terms, and total $471,707.

Government to Take Over Elevators.

Ottawa, June 25.—The Federal Government will in all probability introduce legislation at the next session of Parliament to authorize the taking over by it of all the terminal grain elevators in Canada. The proposed legislation will involve the expenditure of several million dollars.

Soldier's Sudden Death.

Kingston, June 25.—Richard Kirkpatrick of Cobourg, a member of the 40th Regiment, which has been in camp at Barriefield, died very suddenly yesterday morning. He was 40 years of age, and is survived by a wife and child. He [illegible] Matthew Kirkpatrick of Oshawa.

He Had Quit.

"You say you have quit smoking?"

"Yep; never going to smoke again."

"Then why don't you throw away those cigars?"

"Never! I threw away a box of good cigars the last time I quit smoking, and it taught me a lesson."—Houston Post.

Wanted to Bribe Senator.

Washington, June 25.—Senator Gore yesterday afternoon charged that an attempt had been made to bribe him with $50,000 in the interest of a syndicate of lawyers who are seeking to enforce Indian contracts that would yield them a fee of three million dollars at the expense of the Chactaw and Chickasaw Indians. He made the charge on the floor of the Senate.

It appears from Gore's statement that a syndicate obtained individual contracts with about 10,000 Chactaw and Chicasaw Indians to collect as their agents in the sale by the Indians of the immensely valuable coal and oil lands in the reservation of the two nations.

The percentage for the agents, if the contracts should be carried out, was placed by Gore at $3,000,000.

A. O. Graydon, city engineer of London, has sent in his resignation.

Government Pay for Two Firemen.

Ottawa, June 25.—Fire Chief Graham will suggest to the Dominion Government that it maintain two men on the Ottawa Fire Department to inspect the fire-fighting appliances in connection with the Government buildings. The chief's idea is not that two men should do all the inspecting, but that the Government should maintain two men on the force, and in return the chief would assign different responsible men to inspect the buildings, examine the fire-fighting apparatus, post employes as to what to do in case of fire, and also to see that no waste paper or other rubbish be allowed to accumulate.

Hospitals Difficulty.

Montreal, June 25.—Two of the leading hospitals are badly in need of money, and if the Notre Dame does not get relief soon the announcement is made that their patients will have to be sent to other institutions.

About the time the King died James Ross suggested that instead of building a monument they raise $500,000, half of which would be for the Montreal General Hospital and half for Notre Dame, but he does not seem to get any support, and the monument idea will be carried out.

Spain and the Vatican.

Madrid, June 25.—A semi-official announcement made last night indicates that the Government desiring an amicable settlement of the controversy, will give the Vatican an opportunity to modify its attitude in the matter of its protest against the decree amending the constitution and authorizing the edifices of non-Catholic religious societies to display the insignia for public worship.

Another Falls Suicide.

Niagara Falls, Ont., June 25.—The bodies of two men, in the water for several days, were recovered at Canadian landing of the Maid of the Mist yesterday.

An unknown man leaped over the Canadian Falls from the third Sister Island yesterday. No clue to his identity was found.

Misses

THERE is one place at least in which the fortunate girl reigns supreme, and that is in her own summer bungalow. There she is sole mistress, besides chief cook and bottle washer, and there she follows absolutely the dictates of her own fancy. In such a place she has a power and an independence similar to that of her married friends. There, moreover, she learns, in the way of amusement, the fundamental principles of housekeeping, which are likely to be of inestimable benefit to her.

Several girls whose parents have country estates have induced them to build small bungalows for their use, in which they may spend a part of their summer and where they may have also the privilege to follow closely whatever specialty appeals to their taste. An added advantage is that they are able to entertain their friends with the spirit of harmless freedom that is sometimes impossible under the constraint and formality of the parental roof. Such entertaining, of no matter how simple a nature, teaches the girl in the bungalow poise and gives her the ability to put others at their ease. The opportunity is one that develops her latent talent in the direction of being a good hostess.

ONE of the most pleasing illustrations of the girl in the bungalow is found at a country estate of vast proportions in New Hampshire and owned by a New York family of a fair amount of wealth. On this place horses are bred, automobiles are raced, sports of various kinds are enjoyed and a generally gay and happy life is pursued.

Still, the daughter of this house desired that a bungalow should be erected for her in a spot of deep, romantic seclusion, and yet at no great distance from the main house. At first the request was looked upon as a whim of which she would soon tire, but when it was realized that she had seriously considered all points pertaining to the building of the house and that her ideas were practical and unique, it was determined to let her have her way. Wonderment also as to why this girl, with every possible luxury at her finger tips, should wish to live part of her time in a bungalow and do her own work was more or less quelled. As an acknowledgment of her first triumph she named the bungalow Hadherway, or, when worded separately, had her way.

To build a small but livable bungalow requires some ingenuity. This particular one gave at first sight the impression that a bit of the out of door world had been enclosed. This was perhaps because of the free circulation of air it afforded and also because of the unusual arrangement of the windows. While a few were in the direct line of vision, others were so high up in the walls that veritable tree pictures were seen, giving the living room the subtle effect of being built in the treetops. There were no upper rooms, the living room, dining room, bedrooms, baths and kitchen being all on the one level, delightfully in touch with Mother Earth.

The interior was exceedingly habitable and cosey, yet no attempt had been made to compete with the highly luxurious homes derisively termed bungalows. It was pre-eminently a bungalow in which to enjoy experimental housekeeping. Rag carpets covered the floors, old colored prints of early American dates were seen on the walls, claiming the attention through their remote treatment; the lighting was done by candles, while the bungalow relied for heat on the open wood fires placed in large chimneys.

A novel feature about one chimney was that where it ran up the outside of the house, a fireplace had been made to open on the covered porch. On cool summer mornings, therefore, this outside wood fire was lighted readily, it being protected from too strong draughts by a blind-like curtain that unrolled from the roof. Then while the fresh mountain air swept over the porch no sensation of chilliness reached the occupants of the commodious chairs in front of the fire. In fact, throughout the season—for the New Hampshire summers are cool—this fire was one of the comforting attractions of the bungalow.

THE young girl who possessed this haven usually slept in it at night in preference to being at the main house. She argued that since it was necessary for her to be there early in the morning she found it pleasanter to open her eyes first on the scene of action than after she had been amply fed and soothed at the larger house. At the bungalow she made her own breakfast as well as that of the friends she might have stopping with her.

In the beginning she found it very difficult to serve the entire breakfast hot at the same time; she complained that with the perverseness of inanimate objects her rolls would not become even warm until after the coffee had turned stone cold. Gradually, however, she learned to gauge the time various things require to arrive at the desired state of hotness; and it was a comfort to her to feel that her most strenuous experiments had been made on herself. The knowledge that there was no one to complain was fairly blissful.

As soon as breakfast was over it had naturally to be cleared away, the dishes had to be washed, set back in their places and a wholesome air of tidiness restored to the kitchen. Usually the visitors at the bungalow were eager to assist with this work, but their hostess was very positive in her refusal of their services. She wished to serve them, she said, and to do everything herself. It was for this reason that she had built the bungalow. Perhaps they would not have acceded to her request so willingly had it not been apparent that in the work she found, in truth, her pleasure. While they sat on the porch or elsewhere, reading the morning papers, she pursued her labors.

This bungalow was kept in an astonishing state of cleanliness. Every morning it was swept and dusted and its wooden floors were scrubbed by the young housewife. In fact, she seemed to find real zest and amusement in the stiff floor brush, the warm bubbly soapsuds and her own prowess in making the dirt to vanish. She learned in a tentative, interesting way the true inwardness of housecleaning.

When this work was over there came a time of pause, given often to study or else shared with her friends in some sort of sport. But she would leave them in the middle of a set of tennis if the sun indicated the hour for her return to the bungalow to prepare the luncheon.

This was usually a meal of cold meat and salads and numbers of trifles and dainties arranged most carefully. The gardens of the estate provided her with many kinds of vegetables, which she learned to cook scientifically. She became, in fact, so expert in her manipulation of vegetables that it was jokingly remarked that she could put to shame the vegetable cooks of the large hotels in the cities.

With the end of luncheon and the aftermath of clearing away and dishwashing the work of this young girl in the bungalow was done for the day. The afternoon, and whatever it implied, had its impetus from the main house. There dinner was eaten and the evening passed, although before the time of the sandman the young girl was back again in her bungalow casting about a watchful eye that all was in order and safe for the night. The morning then came on with unerring speed, the time when she had to be up and astir to get the breakfast.

SHIRT WAIST BELTS.

SHIRT waist belts designed for the summer season are of infinite variety.

What is known as the aboriginal or American Indian style is made of a two inch wide strip of taupe or tan colored suede laced throughout its entire length with med[illegible] size[illegible] Venetian beads. Its lower edge is finished with a leather thong fringe and the ends are joined with a large buckle of metal, showing a repoussé beaten Indian head.

Bronze leather belts to match walking shoes and shopping bags are in a variety of widths. Their edges are stitched with bright or dull gold thread and their buckles are of gilded or bronzed metal.

Combination elastic belts have entire backs composed of silk elastic while the tab ends are of heavy calf cut to conform with the shape of the fancy, circular one-piece buckle with which they are equipped. These belts are to found in all the popular shades.

Two English leather covered stitched buckles give a droop front and a unique and impressive appearance to the enamelled kid and sealskin belts designed especially for sporting costume accessories. They are in the dull browns, greens, blues and grays used for golf and tennis skirts.

Persian patterned silk rubber belts, which lend a pleasing color note to a white or black frock, have large buckles set with a Gainsborough beauty medallion, and girlish, are of cretonne printed with Dutch belts, which are extremely dainty blue and white Delft designs and have two small pearl buckles, one set at each side of the front centre.

Comfortable Hot Wave Negligees

WITH the weather clerk sounding warnings of the approach of warm waves, the girl who did not realize the necessity of taking time by the forelock and prepare for the days when exertion of any sort is vexing to the spirit, is hastily collecting an assortment of summer negligees.

This year voile is a favorite material, as it is very light of weight, does not wrinkle readily and comes in white and a variety of delicate tints. The prettiest models in full length negligees are of white voile striped with a color and trimmed with bands of matching ribbon. Some of them are cut after the two piece pattern, semi-fitted by means of darts running from the shoulders to below the waist and with seams extending from the throat, across the shoulders and along the outer side of the sleeves to below the elbows. Others, on Russian lines, have seamless shoulders, collarless necks and belts and trimmings of rice braiding, and a third popular model is the regulation kimono with butterfly sleeves.

Cotton crêpes were never more extensively used for light weight negligees. The most attractive of these garments are of all white or flower printed material, bordered with white or colored soft silk bands and fastened with cotton crochet frogs and cords. Next in favor are crashes and linens, which are smartest when braided in self-color or in two tones of pale green, mauve, rose or blue. For breezeless days there are half-fitted negligees of dotted Swiss, figured muslin, plain sheer mull and crossbar lawn trimmed with muslin embroidery, Valenciennes lace or footing and ribbon bows with streamers.

If a girl does not mind the expense of having the material accordion plaited, there are no more easily made or prettier negligees for warm weather than those of Empire design in liberty or China silk trimmed with Persian bands. These, of course, must be cleaned instead of laundered, but the fact that they do not readily wrinkle is greatly in their favor.

The girl who is a member of an Adamless Eden household should have a variety of warm weather breakfast negligees, including one in the shape of a [illegible] ter length Mandarin coat of [illegible] silk bordered with satin bands and having silk tassels on the outer corners of the wide sleeves. The same model is pretty in China silk lined albatross or challie, materials which also are in demand for breakfast sacques of Russian blouse shape outlined and belted with dark blue or red bands.

Of the seamless shouldered order is a new model consisting of a two piece little jacket with puffed elbow sleeves, terminating with a band and almost completely covered by a detachable fichu of such huge proportions that its sides veil the tops of the sleeves. This negligee is daintiest in semi-transparent material, like dotted Swiss or mull.

Another charming model is in all over eyelet muslin embroidery, trimmed with Valenciennes lace and insertion. The back and fronts are pony shaped and the short, flowing sleeves are slashed at the top and tied with ribbons.

Simpler and more quickly put together and easily laundered short sacques are of plain white muslin, striped or figured dimity or barred lawn. Some of them are made with loose fronts, fitted back, square neck and muslin embroidery or lace edged; others are shirred at the waist line and finished about the throat with a Dutch collar, and a third variety is in the style of a kimono, cut off just below the hips and joined in front with ribbon ties.

SIMPLE GUIMPES.

SLEEVED or sleeveless guimpes are easily made accessories which serve to vary the effect of a girl's afternoon or evening frocks. Among the launderable guimpes are those of fine white lawn or linon, pin tucked at front and back and finished about the neck and wrists with embroidery edging.

Others have narrow bands of Valenciennes inserted between clusters of tucks and a matching edging at the throat, and there are many of dotted Swiss, tucked and lace trimmed and of allover embroidered muslin, trimmed with Valenciennes or Cluny. Some of these launderable guimpes have Dutch collars and attachable elbow cuffs, but the most practical sort for winter service have stock collars and full length sleeves and are worn over China silk slips.

While white net does not readily launder it nevertheless makes up into satisfactory guimpes, as dust seems to sift through the material instead of clinging to it. Unless a girl sews very neatly she should not attempt one of the net guimpes which have cluster tucks at front and back, divided by strips of Valenciennes, narrow satin ribbon run through beading or bands braided with soutache in white or color. An expert needlewoman who also possesses limitless patience may fashion a guimpe of plain net and then embroider it elaborately or she may appliqué silk foliage upon the thin material, outlining the leaves with cording of matching hue.

Party frock guimpes are of fish net trimmed with three inch wide bands of Brussels worked with tiny crystals and a flower pattern in white or colored threads, with broad bands of a mesh overlaid with a network of silver embroidered with silver thread, with Brussels worked with a pale color, silver and a thread of black, or with bronze, silver and gold.

Guimpes of bullion net are not only ex[illegible] easily made, as they [illegible] themselves." The daintiest are of coarse La Tosca net in silver or gold, with narrow self-toned stripes of silver overlaid with gold or of allover gold lightly embroidered with gold or silver threads. These accessories should be mounted upon white chiffon rather than upon a matching tissue, as heavy metallic effects upon the throat do not become a young girl.

VERANDA LIGHTS.

FOR lighting verandas and the balconies [illegible] country houses, private roof gardens, &c., window boxes and urns of artificial flowers are very much the fashion.

The boxes are of gold basketry, plaster of Paris in ivory or green, porcelain stucco and rustic work. All sorts of flowers are used for this purpose, those having tall s[illegible]s seeming to be preferred.

Such [illegible]tiful artificial flowers are made nowadays that the effect is most pleasing, especially with iris, peonies or ivy.

Shrubs having quite tall branches and planted in large urns are most effective with the [illegible]tric lights concealed among the leaves.

PRACTICAL TALKS BY THE APRIL GRANDMOTHER

"KNITTED face cloths are not the daintiest sort of fancy work imaginable," admitted the April Grandmother as she held up a large square of coarsely knitted rough white wool for the inspection of her assembled granddaughters, "but there are few toilet conveniences of more importance. And one must have a large supply, for of course seven of them go to the laundry every week to be as thoroughly boiled and bleached as are the pocket handkerchiefs. Otherwise a girl might just as well use the microbe harboring sponge or flesh brush, for a face cloth that has been in service for longer than one day cannot possibly be anything save a medium for smearing the cuticle with germ infected particles of stale soap, which burrow into the pores and later make a formal début in the shape of dark brown blotches or [illegible]sightly little pimples.

"No matter what any one may tell you about the value of cold cream as a complexion cleanser," continued the April Grandmother, "there is nothing to equal plenty of soap, provided it is promptly washed off first with warm and finally with cold water. If soap is allowed to dry upon the face it draws and consequently helps to wrinkle a cuticle of thin texture and lends an oily appearance to one that is thick and smooth. Either condition is deplorable, but not to be compared to [illegible] to sink into the pores and form a sticky resting place for dust particles, ultimately to become blackheads which to the casual observer spell 'uncleanliness,' although their unfortunate possessor may be one of the neatest of persons.

"Do not all crowd before the mirror at one time," pl[illegible] the April Grandmother as the three young girls simultaneously rushed to the old fashioned pier glass. "And if you discover a wee blackhead—I really have not noticed any in my immediate family," she interpolated—"beware of squeezing it out, for that leaves in the cuticle a hole which will simply be a repository for other and larger particles of dust. The best plan is to work out the grime by laying upon the face a coarsely knitted rough wool cloth soaked in borax softened warm water and allowing it to remain until cool. If a dozen of such applications do not dislodge a blackhead which is obstinate because buried deeply in the cuticle spread a thick layer of cold cream upon the place and let it remain there for as long as convenient, removing it with a dry cloth and then bathing the entire face with cold water. Persistent treatment of this sort is better than resorting to the steaming process, which, while it thoroughly cleanses the cuticle, makes its texture tender and enlarges its pores.

"And enlarged pores," added the April Grandmother solemnly, "are apt to characterize the mi[illegible] middle aged woman [illegible] in her youth she was not familiar with that simple and inexpensive toilet convenience of the gently bred woman, the always fresh face cloth."

FOR THE CAMPER.

FOR camping trips the new crêpe lingerie will be found a valuable addition to the roughing outfit. It is intended specially for this occasion and for travelling, as it requires no ironing and thereby reduces the laundry work by one-half. The services of a good laundress are not always easy to obtain for camping trips, and where fifty or a hundred [illegible] their summer vacation together at a school camp this part of the routine work assumes great importance.

The new crêpe lingerie comes in sets or separate pieces. It resembles the French material from which blouses have been made, and it is simply trimmed with edgings of real Cluny or Valenciennes laces. There are no frills or tucks to make them harder to handle in the process of cleansing, but they are by no means unattractive. On the contrary, some of the designs are quite as dainty as models of batiste or dimity.

One girl who expects to join a company of schoolgirl campers to rest, do a little study and grow strong and healthy in the outdoor life has supplied herself with a complete outfit of crêpe lingerie for the two months she will be away from the city and conventional life. The set includes half a dozen of everything, and for variety she selected a few pieces in the sheer seersucker crêpe which has narrow strips of plain material alter[illegible]ing with stripes of the crinkly. The nightgowns are made in kimono fashion and the combination suits are princess, with very little trimming.

JAPANESE BOXES.

JAPANESE bamboo boxes, which come in nests, are useful for holding the many trifles of a young girl's wardrobe. It is only recently that these offerings from the Orient could be obtained here, but now all the leading shops dealing in Eastern goods keep them. The original set comprises six rectangular receptacles about two or two and a half inches in depth. By using the larger of each group of two for the cover one may have three [illegible] places in which to keep ribbons, gloves, collars and the various trinkets which so easily lose themselves in a dresser drawer.

The rich reddish brown of the bamboo cannot fail to please the eye of any girl. The wood is split into strips about half an inch wide and woven together in an open basket pattern. The edges are strongly bound with strips of the bamboo laced together. Other baskets are to be found in this same material, and the fern holders are unusually charming when filled with fresh green moss and delicate green sprays. These baskets are lined with dull brass boxes, which slip into the bamboo part, so that they do not show from the outside. For country houses they are particularly well adapted, and so are the large handled baskets for holding the garden flowers as they are freshly culled.

Japanese straw sandals are another useful article which can be picked up in these Oriental shops. They have woven soles of grass or fibre, with cross straps of flowered silk to match one's kimono. Or if they do not match in coloring the original straps can be covered with a silk that does. Other sandals have embroidered coverings for the toes and are heelless like the strapped ones.

Silk and Cretonne Toilet Cases.

IT is not every young miss that appreciates the advantage of having a specialty. To possess one, however, even should it verge on faddism, sets a girl apart from the average humanity and causes her to be regarded as a distinct personality. More is required of a girl at the present time than that she shall pass along amiably with the crowd. She must be something unusual or do some one thing better than others in order to be looked upon with interest at home and abroad.

Happily, the capabilities of American girls are varied and very numerous. Art, music and literature afford them the usual opportunities from which to select the specialty best suited to their talents. But even after casting their lot with one of the arts it is not infrequent for them to sieve it down to some small section in which they think they can excell.

A girl with a talent for music realizes that she cannot compass the whole range of the art with any degree of proficiency without giving to it her entire life. She specializes, therefore, choosing for her field of action a distinctive style of music. This may be ballad singing or the rendering of curious old folk lore songs, an accomplishment now very popular. It may again be lullaby melodies. If instrumental music is her métier she may follow Chopin to the exclusion of all other composers, even to the point of being known as a Chopinite.

It is the same with art. A girl who paints prefers now to make a specialty of mural decoration, pastel portraits or of the one kind of artistic work in which she feels she is most at home.

One young girl has found her specialty in the study of the lives of great composers. She has thus combined music and literature and made herself as well acquainted with the details and intricacies of the experiences of various musicians as if they were members of her family. When she sits down at the piano to play some celebrated passage she mentions as a little preface the exact circumstances under which the composition was written. To the majority of her listeners this is very interesting.

Other young girls take as their specialty the collecting of objets d'art. A few even are clever enough to do it in view of the increased value of things as a collection rather than as separate specimens. They begin with a few things of moderate value, then sell them out; buy others more rare and costly, and so keep doing until they arrive at owning mostly museum pieces. To collect snuff boxes, old fans, miniatures, antique ivories and jade are all specialties in which up to date girls indulge.

One interesting girl has made a specialty of co[illegible]ing old snuff and jewel boxes. She has learned to mould metal, to make and to apply enamels and to set semi-precious jewels in ornamentation of her work. Another has given her spare time to the designing of book plates, a specialty which, as several others, can be turned to financial account should the necessity arise.

To have a specialty that is worth while means considerable work and concentration of purpose. But in the end it invariably repays its young mistress in the interest it adds to her life and in the paths it opens for her to give pleasure to others.

THE SUMMER TEA TRAY.

FOR serving afternoon tea on the lawn or veranda the young girl is offered this season most attractive trays and tea sets, which suggest summer in their cooking and design. The cretonne tray covered with glass and supplied with a light wooden frame and handles is a favorite just now, and so is the round bamboo Japanese tray, which comes in several sizes. The cretonne and chintz ones are liked because they have quaint flowered patterns which can be reproduced almost exactly in the china.

A new set of English porcelain is called the pheasant tea set on account of the bird being used as a feature of the decoration. It has bright pinks, reds and yellows blended artistically in the pattern on a creamy white ground. The pieces are well shaped and are not so expensive as to place the set beyond the reach of any but the wealthy.

An oval tray covered with chintz in a pheasant pattern completed this English set, which always brought forth expressions of delight from those who enjoyed veranda tea poured by the youthful hostess who presided over it. The tray had a woven bamboo rim stained dull brown, and the two handles were of the same material, stout enough, however, to carry all the tray would hold.

In warm weather guests appreciate dishes and accessories which suggest coolness and the wise young woman aims to have her tea table and tray meet with her guests' approval. The circular bamboo trays have no handles and they are seldom carried, for the reason that they are not quite steady. The usual thing is to have them placed on a large tea table or a frame, with all the tea set arranged conveniently, and for serving individuals smaller bamboo trays are used.

Trays and sets of this description are liked for indoor service also, and they match the coloring of the room. Sometimes blue, pink or yellow is the predominating tone. For indoor use it is much more important to have the color harmonize with the surroundings than to have it suggest coolness.

C.G.E. WON CHAMPIONSHIP OF MIDLAND FOOTBALL LEAGUE

Nicholls Oval saw another championship won and lost on Saturday, when the Canadian General Electric football team won the honors of the Senior Midland Football League by defeating the Bowmanville eleven by a score of 3—0. It was a great game and while the visitors didn't score, it wasn't on account of not trying. The locals, who by the way, have gone through the season without a loss, were always on the job, and were the better team in all departments. They had speed and combination in chunks, and distributed it evenly throughout. No scoring was done in the first half, but after the rest the Electrics showed their trumps, and French, Miller and Baird sent the ball past Spry.

The result gives the winners the round by a total score of 5—2, the two teams each getting a brace of goals in the contest at Bowmanville. The new champions intend challenging for the Ontario championship, and their opponents will likely be Claremont.

PARK ST. REFUSED TO BE PRESENTED WITH THE GAME

And Strathconas Entered the Winners Column--West Ends Couldn't Connect With Quinlan's Offerings and Were Shut Out--Scores Were 10-9 and 8-0.

It doesn't make much difference now who wins the coming fight; it matters not who flies his ship or makes the longest flight. It cuts no ice how soon our streets with asphalt will be paved, nor no one cares about the way in which Bill Baillie's rayed. It doesn't matter if the cars don't travel to the lakes, it makes no difference which old name the new Smith street bridge takes. Nor do we care a rap about the subway to be built, or whether at the fire hall there'll be another tilt. We don't care whether "Haag" blows in, or whether printers smile about that trip to Cobourg, when 'twas raining all the while. It matters not by fishing stunts, who climbs the hill of fame, it's only this we care about, THE STRATHS HAVE WON A GAME.

The Straths have told some hard luck tales about the frays now past, but now that they have won a game, let's hope we've heard the last. That scrappy go from start to end, with Park Street in the bag, has made them big and chesty, and they think they'll win the "rag." Both teams made awful bungles, they ran bases like a cow, and oft times the little stout guy, was the "bignoise" in a row. For the players felt like kicking and they kicked with all their might, but there wasn't any changes, and the lad we guess was right. 'Tis with shame the box score's printed, and it's hoped that many eyes will peruse the error column, and will think, "My, such large lies. For the scorer, to be telling, he is in the champion class, or forgot and thought 'twas cricket, he was watching on the grass. But it's true, the slips were thirty, and the runs were nine and ten, it's a record to be proud of—nix—both gangs should get the "pen." Park Street dished up three new faces, Barrie, Laing and Mort McGill and the recruit from the School League, scored a run and biffed the pill. Dusty pitched the kind with brands on, and the Dutchman's work at first, made the brakes work smooth and surely, when the time came for the burst.

No. 2, FRAY.

The second game went T.A.S., they galloped round for eight, while West Ends, though the fare was tough, took goose eggs on their plate. The trouble was the grey suit boys were posing while at bat, instead of smashing at the ball, stood there till "Tom" cried scat. The Prunes was working grandly, and could shoot them o'er at will, and the list of three-strike wafters counts up fifteen on the bill. Not a man went to the first bag free of charge, nor was one hit, and the man behind was steady, had the glue right on his mit. Lefty Creswell, too, was flinging, he had foolers by the peck, and refused to leave his station like the peanut boy on deck. There were two great running catches, "Min" and "Fat" each grabbed a drive that looked easy for a safety, these plays made the game look live. "Mike" O'Brien worked for Yebbie, and while he let some get away, he made up for his two slipups, hit three safes and crossed the fray. Just to show how things were working, West Ends only hit three times, and but two got down to second, seven was their list of crimes.

First Innings.

West Ends—Gibson and Dickie fanned, and Brydie grounded out to first.

T.A.S.—V. Corkery missed three, Callaghan was safe on Heaslip's error and stole second. M. O'Brien singled scoring Callaghan. Quinlan struck out. McFadden hit over second, O'Brien going home. McFadden was out stealing second, Laing to Dobson. Two runs.

Second Innings.

West Ends went out in order.

Giroux grounded out, Cresswell to Heaslip. W. O'Brien flew out to Guerin but Doherty doubled to left. Jack Corkery fouled out to Laing.

Third Innings.

Quinlan fanned Guerin, Heaslip and Cresswell in order.

V. Corkery missed three. Callaghan singled, stole second and went to third when Dobson let Laing's throw go to centre field. M. O'Brien hit safely, scoring Callaghan. Dickie dropped Quinlan's fly, but got the runner at second. McFadden struck out. One run.

Fourth Innings.

T.A.S. went out in order.

Fifth Innings.

Quinlan again made the first three batters hit the air.

Jack Corkery struck out. V. Corkery beat out a bunt, stole second, from where he scored on Callaghan's single. M. O'Brien flew out to Minorgan and Quinlan was out on bunt strikes. One run.

Sixth Innings.

Heaslip flew out to V. Corkery. Cresswell was safe on O'Brien's fumble but was thrown out taking second. Gibson bunted safely, but Dickie grounded out to M. O'Brien.

T.A.S. went out one, two, three.

Seventh Innings.

Brydie singled over second, but was out stealing third. Dobson and Laing fanned.

J. Corkery grounded out, and his brother was hit by pitched ball. He stole second and went to third on a passed ball. Callaghan flew out to Minorgan and O'Brien singled, scoring Corkery. Quinlan went out to Minorgan. One run.

Eighth Innings.

The West Ends were retired in order.

McFadden was hit and stole second. Giroux flew out to Minorgan. W. O'Brien hit safely between first and second. Doherty hit through Minorgan and both runners scored. J. Corkery grounded out to Heaslip and Doherty scored on a passed ball. V. Corkery struck out. Three runs.

Ninth Innings.

It was one, two three for the West Ends.

EVIDENCE IS NOT WANTED IN THE GOULDTHRITE CASE

The Truth About the Scandal at Ottawa is That the Fugitive Took Orders That the Government Had Placed With its Canadian Supporters and Had Transferred Them to His American Friends.

Ottawa, June 28.—There is no news yet of Gouldthrite, the fugitive superintendent of stationery at the Government Printing Bureau. Commissioner Sherwood of the Dominion police, and two of his assistants are in the United States seeking for clues as to his whereabouts, but the only official statement forthcoming last night was that Col. Sherwood is expected back to-night.

Mrs. Gouldthrite has evidently gone to join her husband. She is said to have been shadowed by detectives at Prescott on Saturday, who crosses the border after her.

The opinion is persistently expressed that the Government is not anxious to bring Gouldthrite back to justice, as evidence which he could give would be disconcerting. The story published by Government newspapers that circulars and photographs of Gouldthrite had been sent broadcast, is untrue. One of the inspectors of the Dominion police force said yesterday: "No circulars or photographs have been sent out. I do not know where the newspapers publishing that story got their information." The suggestion is made that if Gouldthrite is placed in the dock, the whole method the Liberal party adopts of raising funds will be revealed.

All this points to a "coup" brought off by Gouldthrite and his accomplices. He must have had accomplices. There are rumors that a Toronto man is mixed up in the scandal, but that, like Gouldthrite, he has gone away. The whole story boiled down is simply this, that Gouldthrite ran an opposition show to the Government. The Government and Gouldthrite are in exactly the same position, only Gouldthrite won. The Government gave orders for supplies to certain Canadian firms, and these firms contributed to the coffers of the party to build up a huge Canadian fund with which to lick the Tories. Gouldthrite transferred the orders, and instead of the Government getting the rake-off, he put it in his pocket.

Gouldthrite has been living in expensive fashion. He has a luxurious residence in Rockliffe Park, the fence around which alone cost $1,800, yet his income until this year was but $2,100. It is now $2,300. He gave out that he made a hit of Right of Way mining stock. He was a quiet and unassuming little man, who made many staunch friends. He seemed quite satisfied to take his pleasure in the company of his wife and little boy.

MAY MAKE CONCESSION

C.P.R. Reported to be Willing to Yield a Point—Arrangements Made for a Strike.

Montreal, June 28.—Following a lengthy conference yesterday between the men of the C.P.R., it is announced that no further progress has been made, but it is believed, in spite of Leonard's letter, the company will make concessions.

There will be a conference with the Grand Trunk officials this afternoon, at which it is believed a last ultimatum will be sent to the company.

At yesterday's conference the C.P.R. was represented by Mr. Leonard, the general manager of eastern lines; Mr. A. D. McTier, assistant to the vice-president, and Mr. Murphy, the general superintendent. There were about 40 delegates representing the men, including Mr. Murdock, the vice-president of the Brotherhood of Trainmen, and Mr. S. N. Berry of the Conductors' Union.

It appears that the C.P.R. representatives firmly maintained the position already taken, which is that the company is agreeable to accepting the award of the conciliation board, although it thinks the wages allowed excessive, but will not concede one iota beyond the award.

The men, on their part, were equally firm in standing by their original demands for the standard of wages decided on by the International Union.

It was further stated that no further meeting had been arranged with the C.P.R. representatives, but that it was just possible there might be another. The C.P.R. is understood to have made all arrangements for running the trains in case of a strike.

WRIGHT MACHINES BEAT DE LESSEPS AT EVERY TURN

Second Day of Montreal Aviation Meet Consists of Nine Flights, Including One by McCurdy, Which is Not Much of a Success.

Montreal, June 28.—At Lakeside yesterday afternoon the Wright machines easily defeated the French Count De Lesseps' in every particular. There were nine flights made altogether, six by the Wright biplanes, two by De Lesseps in his monoplane, and one, which scarcely counted, by McCurdy, the Canadian.

Lachapelle, in a Wright machine, won the speed trial, making 4,000 yards at 40 miles an hour, and going around the while course in three minutes.

The highest flight ever made in the Dominion was made by the boyish Brookens, in a Wright, going up 1,650 feet, above the clouds. His driving was a revelation. Awe-struck describes the attitude of those who saw it. He seemed at times to be playing with danger and defying fate to injure him. He crested and dipped, he billowed and turned and seemed like a mechanical acrobat in the air. He startled everyone by his speed.

Finish and discretion were his dominant features. At times the machine rocked as it did difficult angles. Then it seemed as if asleep on the arms of the wind with the white cloud above as its snowy pillow. Again it bolted like a streak, only to sink again in sweet repose into the lap of the sighing breeze. Brookens holds a record at Indianapolis of 4,200 feet up.

Ralph Johnson, also in a Wright, flew over Lake St. Louis, and remained up for half an hour.

McCurdy, with his Baddeck No. 2, was a failure yesterday, but claims that as soon as the machinery is fixed he will show what Cape Breton can do.

A startling incident took place when Dixon, the boy aviator from Columbus, Ohio, fell from his balloon, a few feet from the ground, unhurt, but the crowd thought he had gone up with the dirigible balloon, and when the gas bag exploded 3,000 feet in the air, all supposed the lad was killed.

The dirigible resembled the skeleton of a boat attached to a huge cigar-shaped balloon. The boat part was directed and guided by ropes which the aviator pulled in the direction in which he wished his machine to go. Yesterday Dixon, about only 17, was making his 271st ascension.

The event of to-day will be a race ten times around the course between the Wright team and De Lesseps, who is the challenger.

De Lesseps yesterday tendered a luncheon by his French-Canadian friends at the St. Dennis Club, which was attended by 200.

BLOODY BATTLE WITH BANDIT

Atlanta, Ga., June 28.—W. H. Bostwick, the desperado, who killed three men and wounded three at his home near Occilla Sunday, was found dying in his barricaded home yesterday when a company of the National Guard captured the house. He expired within an hour. The five children who were in the house with him were rescued uninjured. It is supposed that a bullet fired during the fight with posses struck him. Sheriff J. P. McInnis died yesterday about the same time as Bostwick.

The guard assembled on all four sides of the house, 200 yards away, and at the command "forward" moved up on the place at double time. The first ones kicked in the door, and with drawn revolvers entered. Bostwick was found unconscious.

CONSUMPTION WILL SURELY BE WIPED OUT

London, June 28.—At the opening of the Sanatorium for Consumptives, Dr. Wm. Osler said we now have knowledge as to how to cure consumption, and it rested with the public whether it will be stamped out. In three generations it would be wiped out unquestionably, he said.

DISSATISFACTION AT BRANTFORD

Brantford, June 28.—Considerable dissatisfaction is felt in municipal circles here following the announcement of the price of hydro-electric power in London. At present for lighting the Cataract Company is being paid 8 1-2 cents per kilowatt, while in London the price quoted by the hydro commission is 6 1-4 cents, less 20 per cent. Under the agreement with Brantford, the contract company is pledged to give a rate 10 per cent. less to Brantford than to any city similarly situated.

W. N. Andrews and other hydro-electric advocates were ridiculed when they quoted the same prices as are now being offered at London, when the bylaw was defeated here after a warm fight. An effort will be made to have the Cataract Company reduce their figures.

Brantford is now suffering with Hamilton for having succumbed to the blandishments of the Cataract power interests.

TRIPLETS, ALL WELL

Toronto, June 28.—Possibly the one thing for which man is least prepared in this world was yesterday given to Charles Hodge, 1[illegible]0 Leslie street, when his wife gave birth to triplets.

The trio consists of two little boys and a girl, all in a more or less healthy condition. Their respective weights are 5 pounds 4 ounces, 5 pounds, and the little girl 4 pounds 12 ounces.

Dr. A. J. Fraleigh was in attendance and gives a favorable report of all concerned.

THE PUBLIC ARE GULLED

New York, June 28.—W. H. Noyes, a representative of Swift & Co., testified at a hearing at the City Hall yesterday that in 1909 the New York public paid $28,000 for 225,000 pounds of wood "spreaders" in its meat.

Hams and bacon weighed before the assemblage yesterday showed how the public is gulled. A ham, including heavy wrapping paper, marked 13 1-4 pounds, tipped the scales at 11 pounds 14 ounces. Another marked 10 1-2 pounds weighed 9 pounds 7 ounces. Similar shrinkage was shown in bacon.

UNITED STATES WANT THE EARTH

London, June 28.—A Hague despatch states that the greater part of ex-Senator Turner's speech for the United States on the fisheries question has been devoted to an endeavor to support by an appeal to a portentious list of authorities that his line of argument favors the theory or the limitation of sovereignty, namely, that the rights of the United States under the treaty of 1818 formed an international servitude, analogous in some degree to those which commonly existed among old German states, but it may be said that the United States contend that the existence of this servitude over the Newfoundland fisheries limits Great Britain's sovereignty to that extent, with the result not only that Great Britain is prevented from exercising her sovereignty so as to make regulations which would impair the fishing rights of the United States, but that the United States are entitled to exercise a sovereignty of their own over the territories in question. The United States claim not only the right to concur in the fishing regulations, but also the right, if they find they are being enforced to the detriment of American citizens, to insist upon as full a participation in the method of their enforcement as that to be exercised by Great Britain herself.

RIOTING IN SPAIN

Madrid, June 28.—The Vatican's latest note to the Spanish Government is regarded as practically an ultimatum. It insists upon the withdrawal of the decree of June 11, as a condition precedent to the continuation of the negotiations over the revision of the concordat.

The Republicans and Radicals are organizing throughout Spain counter manifestations against the Catholic agitation.

GOULDTHRITE MAY BE SUICIDE!

Special to the Review.

Ottawa, June 28.—Gouldthrite, the alleged embezzler for a million, has, so it is stated, done away with himself.

The announcement of the rumored suicide caused great excitement at the Printing Bureau and throughout the city. There are no details up to 1.45, but the Associated Press verifies the rumour to the extent that it says a passenger thought to be Gouldthrite, is missing from a vessel, and that suicide letters have been left behind.

At 2.10 p.m. an official at the office of the Secretary of State intimated that Mr. Murphy had been busy at the bureau all morning and would probably be there this afternoon. The official in charge said that so far as he knew they had received no dispatch regarding any suicide.

CAPT. HAMILTON MET WATERY GRAVE

Capt. William Hamilton, of the J. E. A. Fitzgerald Tug, the Ajax, and one of the best known men on these waters, met death by drowning last night about ten o'clock, when a short distance from Julian's Landing, Stoney Lake.

The tug was engaged in hauling logs for the Cavendish Co., and was a short distance from Juniper Island. Captain Hamilton and the cook, in the employ of the Cavendish Co., by name George Keith, left in a boat to go to the landing for ice. It was shortly after the men left for the return trip to the tug, when the boat upset and Captain Hamilton met his death.

The body was recovered at noon to-day and sent to Bobcaygeon, where the deceased for many years had lived. He is survived by his wife and four children.

ROOSEVELT COMING?

He Has Been Invited to Open Toronto Exhibition.

Toronto, June 28.—Theodore Roosevelt may come to Toronto next October to attend the International Y.M.C.A. convention, even if he shouldn't come earlier.

Mayor Geary has been asked by the local Y.M.C.A. authorities to write the ex-President of the United States inviting him to attend the gathering which opens Oct. 28 and last until Oct. 31. The mayor yesterday afternoon wrote a letter to Mr. Roosevelt, whose present address is "The Outlook" office, New York, and will submit it to the board of control to-day for approval which will, of course, be given.

However, the management of the Canadian National Exhibition are quite confident that the ex-president of the United States will accept an invitation, while the Duke of Connaught, Lord Rosebery, Gen. Baden-Powell, and six or seven other peers, are all probably or possible visitors at the exhibition this year, so Manager Orr said last night. The duke is the coming Governor-General of Canada, but it is not certain that he will be here in the light of the report that Earl Grey is to return to Canada for another year.

"When Mr. Roosevelt was President, he replied to an invitation to visit the exhibition by saying that he would be glad to do so after he had left the presidential chair," said Mr. Orr. "Another reason why it is likely that he will come, is that we have arranged for an encampment of two United States regiments. Besides the 65th Regiment of Buffalo, who will be here the first week, we have secured the consent of Gen. Wilson, commanding the 3rd New York National Guard of Syracuse, for their stay here during the second week."

SCORCHING HEAT INJURING CROPS

Brandon, June 28.—For the first time this season leading farmers admit to-day that the scorching heat is working injury on crops in this district. Sunday's temperature was 90, with a hot wind; yesterday at noon the temperature was 97, with a hotter wind than ever. Prominent farmers agree that heat and wind combined are drying the land right out, and the situation is becoming alarming.

Supt. Murray of the Dominion Government's Experimental Farm says that the crops are coming along altogether too fast. One field of wheat at the farm is heading out, though only a few days ago there was no sign of such premature development. Growing crops are very badly in need of two days' heavy rain, said Mr. Murray.

A prominent farmer, just arrived from the Reston district, says that the crop there is suffering severely, and estimates that a 40 per cent. loss has been already sustained from drought.

Advices from districts west of here says that the crops look fairly well, but rain is badly needed. Successive days of high temperature and wind are wearing down the crop, as evaporation is remarkable and moisture has been extracted to an alarming depth, say experts.

Ogden, Utah, June 28.—Three masked bandits held up the second section of Oregon Short Line train No. 1 northbound, which left Ogden at 1.30 o'clock yesterday morning at Second street, in the northern part of the city. All of the passengers in the train were relieved of their valuables and the express messenger was compelled to deliver the contents of the safe. Two passengers and two trainmen were injured.

The robbers stopped the train by placing railroad torpedoes on the track. The head brakeman went forward to ascertain the cause of the delay and was struck with a revolver by one of the robbers. He was then taken at the point of a pistol to the express car and compelled to call to the messenger to open the door.

YOUNG LIFE IS CLOSED

Eugene Joseph Coughlin Passed Away This Morning at Three O'clock

A young life, full of promise, came to a close this morning about three o'clock, when Eugene Joseph Coughlin, the youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. John Coughlin, of 99 Aylmer street, passed away at the family residence.

The deceased, who was born in Belleville twenty-two years ago came to this city with his parents some fifteen years past, and received his education in the Separate school and Collegiate Institute. Later he joined the staff of the Bank of Ottawa, and was identified with it for five years. One year ago he was transferred to the branch at Lanark to hold the position of teller-accountant. Last Easter he was compelled to give up his duties, through illness, and his ailment, which was heart trouble, despite all medical skill, terminated in his demise.

The late Mr. Coughlin was a young man who was popular amongst a large circle of friends, which he won by his genial disposition and lovable character. He had been prominent in sports, and was a member of the local Rough Rider team when that club won the championship. He had also been a member of the Junior Argonaut Rowing Club, of Toronto.

Besides his sorrowing parents, he leaves one brother, Godfrey, and two sisters, Misses Norah and Eillen, all of this city.

The funeral will take place from the family residence on Thursday morning at nine o'clock, to the Sacred Heart church and thence to St. Peter's cemetery.

TUESDAY, JUNE 28, 1910.

THE BRIDE AND GROOM

The Convention of Charities and Correction, of which Mr. J. H. Burnham, of this city, is president, adopted the following very striking resolution last week in Guelph:

"That the system adopted in some of the States in the American Union, namely, that those about to enter marriage before the proclamation of the banns or the issuing of a marriage license, should be required to present a certificate from a medical commission to the effect that physically and intellectually they are fit to discharge the duties of married life, be introduced among us."

This seems to be sensible, for love is ever blind and sometimes it does not have its eyes opened until after the marriage. It should not be hard to find out whether people are physically fit to wed, but it would take a wise commission to find out the intellectual part of a man or woman's anatomy, and pass judgment as to whether they were fit and proper persons for wedded bliss.

It is very often those with the keenest brain, who live unhappily in the wedded state. The dreamer, the writer, the actor, the business man, whose head is full of grey matter, these are the ones who very often find the silken cords of matrimony turning to real bonds as the years go on.

It is also sometimes the case that the most beautiful woman or the physically perfect man has a terrible temper or some other defect to make a discord in what would otherwise be a rythmic life, and how often the hunch back or the cripple, or the paralyzed, or bedridden one, has the smile of the angel and the voice that speaks of a triumphant soul.

CIRCUS DAY

To-day is circus day. Don't be a grouch, take the family. Let them see the animals, laugh at the clowns, and be startled at the performers on the high wire. The youngsters will never forget the circus, the old seldom grow too old to enjoy it. There may be a few giddy things in fleshlings, but every circus has something at once instructive and unique. Shell out dad and take the whole family. You can't take any of it with you, for there are no pockets in a shroud.

MR. HENDERSON ON HARNESS LEATHER

Mr. David Henderson, M.P. for Halton, took occasion at the end of the session to bring into sharp relief the way the Laurier Government has treated the harness industry. It will be remembered that one of the details of the agreement made by Mr. Fielding with the United States Government was a reduction in the duty on harness leather from 17 1-2 to 15 per cent. "Only three years ago," said Mr. Henderson, "the Government increased the duty on harness leather from 15 to 17 1-2 per cent. I am not authorized by any one to make any complaint with reference to the item, but I draw the attention of the Government to something that I consider peculiar in this matter. Only three years ago it was determined that the proper duty on harness leather should be 17 1-2 per cent. During those three years I have no doubt that men engaged in the production of harness leather have largely increased their plant and gone to a considerable expense with a view to larger production. I know that is the case in the village in which I live, where a harness industry is carried on. I have had no communication from anyone, but I apprehend that a good deal of feeling will be created when those people learn that the Government, without notice, have again reduced the duty from 17 1-2 to 15 per cent. I am not complaining about the reduction of duty, but in a special case like this, where the duty was increased only three years ago, and where men were encouraged to increase their business, with the expectation of a wider market for their output, it seems to be rather a hardship that they should, without notice, be called upon to carry on their operations in a market that is very much limited. I do not know the extent of the imports of harness leather into this country. But I remember a tanner in my riding telling me a year ago with regard to sole leather, that if the American tanners were to throw into Canada two per cent. of their output it would take up the entire market of the Canadian people for sole leather. If that should be the case, or anything approximating to it, with harness leather, it might be a very serious matter."

Which shows very clearly the capricious policy pursued by the Laurier Government towards this industry.

AWAKENING OF SCIENCE

TO THE VALUE OF FRUIT

What is "FRUIT-A-TIVES"?

Medical men are just beginning to realize the possibilities of fruit in curing disease. Its action on the liver, kidneys and skin is wonderful. Yet fruit in its raw state is impracticable in treating disease because of the minute quantity of the active or curative principle contained in fruit juice.

A physician in Ottawa, after years of patient work, discovered a process, whereby the medicinal or bitter principle of fruit juice is increased in quantity and thus a more active and more valuable substance is obtained.

"Fruit-a-tives" is the only medicine in the world made of fruit.

Hundreds of prominent people in every section of the Dominion owe their good health to "Fruit-a-tives." Hundreds more are daily becoming stronger and better by taking them. "Fruit-a-tives" is daily proving its inestimable value as a natural cure in all cases of Constipation, Biliousness, Torpid Liver, Backache and Headache, Neuralgia, Rheumatism, Kidney and Skin Troubles.

50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, or trial box, 25c. Sold by all dealers, or sent, postpaid, on receipt of price by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

A CHRISTIAN ACT

There was a letter in the Review yesterday, a plea for early shopping on Saturday night. Think of the shop girl madame, and go early. It is hard work at best in catering to a buying public, a large number of whom do not know just what they want and who merely look, handle and pass on. In Toronto, Jack Eaton, that prince of good fellows, saw to it that 5,000 employees of the Eaton stores have a half-holiday on Saturday during the heated term. Will he lose anything? Not much. Any of the Eaton army would work their best for Jack Eaton, and the good-will, good cheer and esprite-decorps that he has created in that mammoth store more than repays for any immediate financial loss. When an animal becomes track weary he is not much good in the chase, and when clerks are tired out, they can neither do themselves nor the one who buys or the one they are working for justice.

It is a Christian act to dress up on Sunday, and turn out in the dress parade for church. It is also a Christian act to shop early Saturday evening, and to carry home all the parcels possible, one's self.

TELL THEM NOW

Mr. A. W. Beall, M.A., of Whitby, in an address to the Conference of Charities and Corrections also spoke wisely. He condemned the practice of deceiving children as to facts of their origin. This old joke about telling them that the baby was found under a cabbage leaf, or came down in a rain storm, is too thin. Tell them the truth when they are old enough to understand. Explain to them the majesty of the mind and wonders of the human body, its possibilities, its adaptabilities and powers. The child is bound to find out, and the father and mother are the proper sources of information.

CHIEF KOHLER

Chief Kohler has been acquitted. Kohler's name is familiar to all who read the daily paper. He is the golden rule Chief of Police of Cleveland, who believed that the police system was for reform rather than vengeance, and to help those who needed aid, and who fell because they were weak and human. But, while Kohler was kind to the weak and misguided, he was a terror to the grafter and persistent evil doer. He soon had an army of enemies, and charges were laid against him of drunkenness and immorality. His enemies were powerful ones and the case was fought out in court in the open. Kohler was acquitted on every one of the twenty-five charges. It was shown that his enemies were those who were opposed to good law. He is to be congratulated. Every town has a Kohler. Let him do his duty regardless of his enemies, and some one on whose corns he is treading will be sure to squeal, to start the slander or the scandal. It doesn't make any difference whether the man is a farmer trying to have a drain built, or the mayor of some great city enforcing some unpopular law, there is ever the sneak and the scoundrel to throw the stone when his back is turned. There is always the Christ to be persecuted for the good cause.

THE TRUNK TRAGEDY

Porter Charlton, of New Jersey, married a divorced woman much older than himself, went to Italy on a honeymoon. The honeymoon suddenly ended when Charlton in a fit of temper, clubbed her to death with a mallet, and putting the body in a trunk, sank it in the waters of a lake. The trunk was recovered, Charlton confessed and now the family will try to prove that he is insane. This may be proved as the family of the prisoner is an influential one. A dazzling array of alienists questioned Charlton for two hours and press despatches say that his attitude was one of total indifference. The fault is not so much with the prisoner, who may or may not be insane, as with the laws of the country that allows divorce on any pretext. Husband snores, wife gets a divorce, woman can't bake, another divorce, wanted to have her pet dog in bed, wanted to feed her cats at the table, more divorces. And so it runs, a nation of divorced men and women cannot expect, to be other than a nation where murderers and madmen are found to be in abundance.

HOW PARIS DOES IT.

Guelph Herald.

Paris, France, has decided upon a great scheme of municipal improvement to cost $180,000,000 and to extend over 15 or 18 years. Of the large sum to be spent, $18,000,000 will be devoted to schools, $32,000,000 to waterworks, $8,000,000 to abattoirs, $7,000,000 to hospitals, $6,000,000 to dwellings, sanitation and $86,000,000 to improvements and beautification of the streets, promenades and suburbs. It is altogether the largest scheme of the kind ever undertaken by a city.

It was prescribed by one of the best physicians in this country for years, and is a regular prescription. THE NIGHTMARE.

A Ride on This Strenuous Animal Is Generally Exciting.

The nightmare is one of the best known of all animals and one of the most feared. She is wilder than the tiger and more frightful in its speed than the turkey buzzard. A young nightmare with no previous experience can fling a 200 pound man over her flanks and carry him all over the south sea islands and the Gobi desert in less time than it would take him to look them up on the map.

The nightmare is so called because she is always ridden at night. She is somewhat timid, but may be easily caught. Mix up a little crab flake, some mayonnaise and some rich pastry and you can catch her with it every time. She will also come for mince pie, for broiled lobster, for chicken salad and for a variety of other temptations.

Once the nightmare is caught it is no trouble to ride her [illegible] either. The nightmare usually wears a high saddle without stirrups and studded with redhot nails. She rocks like a ship in a gale as she dashes from mountain peak to mountain peak. The rider soon looses his hold and slides downward, only to find sharks and cuttlefish awaiting him. He hangs on to the mare's legs and is kicked by her hoofs. He lets go and falls 11,000 miles, catching on jagged splinters of rock and crashing through acres of glass and ice. Occasionally the mare comes after him and tramps on him. Sometimes she varies this by eating his legs. When the ride is over the rider wakens sideways in bed very cross and spanks his oldest child before breakfast. The lasting effects of riding nightmares are always more severe upon other members of the family than the rider.

The champion nightmare is Dyspepsicuss Mince Piecuss, a pale green animal with redhot legs, who can do the circuit of the earth upside down in eleven seconds. Nobody likes to ride nightmares, but every one does just the same. They are not as expensive as taxicabs, but are far more exciting.

Montreal Live Stock.

MONTREAL, June 27.—(Special.)—At the Montreal Stock Yards West End Market the receipts of live stock for the week ending June 25 were 2300 cattle, 750 sheep and lambs, 1500 hogs and 1200 calves. The supply on the market this morning for sale consisted of 1000 cattle, 325 sheep and lambs, 600 hogs and 250 calves.

Owing to the continued warm weather, and the increased supplies of cattle, the undertone to the market continues weak, and prices have scored a further decline of ¼c to ½c per lb. since this day week, and the prospects are that they will go still lower in the near future.

Sales of choice steers were made at 7c to 7¼c; good at 6½c to 6¾c; fairly good at 6c to 6¼c; fair ta 5½c to 5¾c, and common at 5c to 5¼c per lb. Common and inferior cows were a drug on the market, and sold at from 3c to 4c per lb. while the better grades brought 4½c to 5½c per lb. The offerings of bulls were not as large as they have been of late, for which the demand was fair, at prices ranging from 4c to 5c per lb., as to quality.

Altho supplies of hogs were much smaller than they were a week ago, yet the undertone to the market continues weak, and prices have a downward tendency. The demand from packers is fairly good, and sales of selected lots were made at $9.50 to $9.75 per 100 lbs., weighed off cars.

There was a good demand for all lines of small meats, of which the offerings were not excessive, and prices in consequence ruled steady. Old sheep sold at 4½c to 5c per lb.; spring lambs at from $3.50 to $5 each, and calves at from $3 to $10 each, as to size and quality.

"When I had sworn to him that his daughter was not in the room and in no danger he conquered his impatience and left me to direct the operations. I told them that they must come to me the moment I called to them or when I fired my revolver. I then sent Daddy Jacques to place himself before the window at the end of the 'right' gallery. I chose that position for Daddy Jacques because I believed that the murderer, tracked on leaving the room, would run through the gallery toward the window which he had left open and, instantly seeing that it was guarded by Larsan, would pursue his course along the 'right' gallery. There he would encounter Daddy Jacques, who would prevent his springing out of the window into the park. Under that window there was a sort of buttress, while all the other windows in the galleries were at such a height from the ground that it was almost impossible to jump from them without breaking one's neck. All the doors and windows, including those of the lumber room at the end of the 'right' gallery—as I had rapidly assured myself—were strongly secured.

"Having indicated to Daddy Jacques the post he was to occupy and having seen him take up his position, I placed M. Stangerson on the landing at the head of the stairs not far from the door of his daughter's anteroom. Everything led me to suppose that when I surprised the murderer in the room he would run by way of the anteroom rather than the boudoir, where the women were, and of which the door must have been locked by Mlle. Stangerson herself if, as I thought, she had taken refuge in the boudoir for the purpose of avoiding the murderer who was coming to see her. In any case he must return to the gallery where my people were awaiting him at every possible issue.

"On coming there he would see on his left M. Stangerson. He would turn to the right, toward the 'off turning' gallery, the way he had prearranged for flight, where at the intersection of the two galleries he would see at once, as I have explained, on his left Frederic Larsan at the end of the 'off turning' gallery and in front Daddy Jacques at the end of the 'right' gallery. M. Stangerson and myself would arrive by way of the back of the chateau. He is ours! He can no longer escape us! I was sure of that.

"The plan I had formed seemed to me the best, the surest and the most simple. It would, no doubt, have been simpler still if we had been able to place some one directly behind the door of mademoiselle's boudoir, which opened out of her bedchamber and in that way had been in a position to besiege the two doors of the room in which the man was. But we could not penetrate the boudoir except by way of the drawing room, the door of which had been locked on the inside by Mlle. Stangerson. But even if I had had the free disposition of the boudoir I should have held to the plan I had formed, because any other plan of attack would have separated us at the moment of the struggle with the man, while my plan united us all for the attack at a spot which I had selected with almost mathematical precision, the intersection of the two galleries.

"Having so placed my people, I again left the chateau, hurried to my ladder and, replacing it, climbed up, revolver in hand.

"If there be any inclined to smile at my taking so many precautionary measures I refer them to the mystery of the yellow room and to all the proofs we have of the weird cunning of the murderer. Further, if there be some who think my observations needlessly minute at a moment when they ought to be completely held by rapidity of movement and decision of action I reply that I have wished to report here at length and completely all the details of a plan of attack conceived so rapidly that it is only the slowness of my pen that gives an appearance of slowness to the execution. I have wished by this slowness and precision to be certain that nothing should be omitted from the conditions under which the strange phenomenon was produced, which, until some natural explanation of it is forthcoming, seems to me to prove, even better than the theories of Professor Stangerson, the dissociation of matter—I will even say the instantaneous dissociation of matter."

CHAPTER XVI.

Strange Phenomenon of the Dissociation of Matter.

"I AM again at the window sill," continues Rouletabille, "and once more I raise my head above it. Through an opening in the curtains, the arrangement of which has not been changed, I am ready to look, anxious to note the position in which I am going to find the murderer, whether his back will still be turned toward me, whether he is still seated at the desk writing. But perhaps—perhaps—he is no longer there. Yet how could he have fled? Was I not in possession of his ladder? I force myself to be cool. I raise my head yet higher. I look—he is still there. I see his monstrous back, deformed by the shadow thrown by the candle. He is no longer writing now, and the candle is on the parquet, over which he is bending—a position which serves my purpose.

"I hold my breath. I mount the ladder. I am on the uppermost rung of it and with my left hand seize hold of the window sill. In this moment of approaching success I feel my heart beating wildly. I put my revolver between my teeth. A quick spring and I shall be on the window ledge. But the ladder! I had been obliged to press on it heavily, and my foot had scarcely left it when I felt it swaying beneath me. It grated on the wall and fell. But already my knees were touching the window sill, and by a movement quick as lightning I got on to it.

"But the murderer had been even quicker than I had been. He had heard the grating of the ladder on the wall, and I saw the monstrous back of the man raise itself. I saw his head. Did I really see it? The candle on the parquet lit up his legs only. Above the height of the table the chamber was in darkness. I saw a man with long hair, a full beard, wild looking eyes, a pale face framed in large whiskers as well as I could distinguish and as I think red in color. I did not know the face. That was, in brief, the chief sensation I received from that face in the dim half light in which I saw it. I did not know it, or at least I did not recognize it.

"Now for quick action. It was in-ceed time for that for as I was about to place my legs through the window the man had seen me, had bounded to his feet, had sprung, as I foresaw he would, to the door of the antechamber, had time to open it and fled. But I was already behind him, revolver in hand, shouting, 'Help!'

"Like an arrow I crossed the room, but noticed a letter on the table as I rushed. I almost came up with the man in the anteroom, for he had lost time in opening the door to the gallery. I flew on wings and in the gallery was but a few feet behind him. He had taken, as I supposed he would, the gallery on his right—that is to say, the road he had prepared for his flight. 'Help, Jacques; help, Larsan!' I cried. He could not escape us. I raised a shout of joy, of savage victory. The man reached the intersection of the two galleries hardly two seconds before me for the meeting which I had prepared, the fatal shock which must inevitably take place at that spot. We all rushed to the crossing place—M. Stangerson and I coming from one end of the right gallery, Daddy Jacques coming from the other end of the gallery and Frederic Larsan coming from the 'off turning' gallery.

"The man was not there!

"We looked at each other stupidly and with eyes terrified. The man had vanished like a ghost. 'Where is he, where is he?' we all asked.

"'It is impossible he can have escaped!' I cried, my terror mastered by my anger.

"'I touched him!' exclaimed Frederic Larsan.

"'I felt his breath on my face!' cried Daddy Jacques.

"'Where is he, where is he?' we all cried.

"We raced like madmen along the two galleries. We visited doors and windows. They were closed—hermetically closed. They had not been opened. Besides, the opening of a door or window by this man whom we were hunting without our having perceived it would have been more inexplicable than his disappearance.

"Where is he, where is he? He could not have got away by a door or a window nor by any other way. He could not have passed through our bodies!

"I confess that for the moment I felt 'done for,' for the gallery was perfectly lighted, and there was neither trap nor secret door in the walls nor any sort of hiding place. We moved the chairs and lifted the pictures. Nothing, nothing! We would have looked into a flowerpot if there had been one to look into!"

When this mystery, thanks to Rouletabille, was naturally explained by the help alone of his masterful mind we were able to realize that the murderer had got away neither by a door, a window nor the stairs, a fact which the judges would not admit.

CHAPTER XVII.

The Inexplicable Gallery.

"MLLE. STANGERSON appeared at the door of her anteroom," continues Rouletabille's notebook. "We were near her door in the gallery where this incredible phenomenon had taken place. There are moments when one feels as if one's brain were about to burst. A bullet in the head, a fracture of the skull, the seat of reason shattered—with only these can I compare the sensation which exhausted and left me void of sense.

"Happily Mlle. Stangerson appeared on the threshold of her anteroom. I saw her, and that helped to relieve my chaotic state of mind. I breathed her; I inhaled the perfume of the lady in black who had been kind to me in my childhood whom I should never see again. I would have given ten years of my life—half my life—to see once more the lady in black. Alas, I no more meet her but from time to time, and yet, and yet, how the memory of that perfume, felt by me alone, carries me back to the days of my childhood! It was this sharp reminder from my beloved perfume of the lady in black which made me go to her, dressed wholly in white and so pale, so pale and so beautiful, on the threshold of the inexplicable gallery. Her beautiful golden hair, gathered into a knot on the back of her neck, left visible the red scar on her temple which had so nearly been the cause of her death. When I first got on the right track of the mystery of this case I had imagined that on the night of the tragedy in the yellow room Mlle. Stangerson had worn her hair in bands. But, then, how could I have imagined otherwise when I had not been in the yellow room?

"But now, since the occurrence of the inexplicable gallery, I did not reason at all. I stood there, stupid, before the apparition—so pale and so beautiful—of Mlle. Stangerson. She was clad in a dressing gown of dreamy white. One might have taken her to be a ghost—a lovely phantom. Her father took her in his arms and kissed her passionately, as if he had recovered her after being long lost to him. I dared not question her. He drew her into the room, and we followed them—for we had to know! The door of the boudoir was open. The terrified faces of the two nurses craned toward us. Mlle. Stangerson inquired the meaning of all the disturbance. That she was not in her own room was quite easily explained—quite easily. She had a fancy not to sleep that night in her chamber, but in the boudoir with her nurses, locking the door on them. Since the night of the crime she had experienced feelings of terror, and fears came over her that are easily to be comprehended.

"But who could imagine that on that particular night when he was to come she would by a mere chance determine to shut herself in with her women? Who would think that she would act contrary to her father's wish to sleep in the drawing room? Who could believe that the letter which had so recently been on the table in her room would no longer be there? He who could understand all this would have to assume that Mlle. Stangerson knew that the murderer was coming—she could not prevent his coming again—unknown to her father, unknown to all but to M. Robert Darzac. For he must know it now. Perhaps he had known it before! Did he remember that phrase in the Elysee garden, 'Must I commit a crime, then, to win you?' Against whom the crime if not against the obstacle, against the murderer? 'Ah, I would kill him with my own hand!' And I replied, 'You have not answered my question.' That was the very truth. In truth, in truth, M. Darzac knew the murderer so well that, while wishing to kill him himself, he was afraid I should find him. There could be but two reasons why he had assisted me in my investigation. First, because I have forced him to do it, and, second, because she would be the better protected.

"I am in the chamber—her room. I look at her, also at the place where the letter had just now been. She has possessed herself of it; it was evidently intended for her—evidently. How she trembles! Trembles at the strange story her father is telling her, of the presence of the murderer in her chamber and of the pursuit. But it is plainly to be seen that she is not wholly satisfied by the assurance given her until she had been told that the murderer by some incomprehensible means had been able to elude us.

"Then followed a silence. What a silence! We are all there—looking at her—her father, Larsan, Daddy Jacques and I. What were we all thinking of in the silence? After the events of that night, of the mystery of the inexplicable gallery, of the prodigious fact of the presence of the murderer in her room, it seemed to me that all our thoughts might have been translated into the words which were addressed to her, 'You who know of this mystery, explain it to us and we shall perhaps be able to save you.' How I longed to save her—from herself and from the other! It brought the tears to my eyes.

"Who can tell that, should we learn the secret of her mystery, it would not precipitate a tragedy more terrible than that which had already been enacted here? Who can tell if it might not mean her death? Yet it had brought her close to death, and we still knew nothing, or, rather, there are some of us who know nothing. But I—if I knew who, I should know all. Who? Who? Not knowing who, I must remain silent out of pity for her. For there is no doubt that she knows how he escaped from the yellow room. When I know who I will speak to him—to him!

"She looked at us now, with a faraway look in her eyes, as if we were not in the chamber. M. Stangerson broke the silence. He declared that, henceforth, he would no more absent himself from his daughter's apartments. She tried to oppose him in vain. He adhered firmly to his purpose. He would install himself there this very night, he said. Solely concerned for the health of his daughter, he reproached her for having left her bed. Then he suddenly began talking to her as if she were a little child. He smiled at her and seemed not to know either what he said or what he did. The illustrious professor had lost his head. Mlle. Stangerson in a tone of tender distress said, 'Father, father!' Daddy Jacques blows his nose, and Frederic Larsan himself is obliged to turn away to hide his emotion. For myself, I am able neither to think or feel. I felt a contempt for myself.

"It was the first time that Frederic Larsan, like myself, found himself face to face with Mlle. Stangerson since the attack in the yellow room. Like me, he had insisted on being allowed to question the unhappy lady, but he had not, any more than had I, been permitted. To him, as to me, the same answer had always been given: Mlle. Stangerson was too weak to receive us. The questionings of the examining magistrate had overfatigued her. It was evidently intended not to give us any assistance in our researches. I was not surprised, but Frederic Larson had always resented this conduct. It is true that he and I had a totally different theory of the crime. I still catch myself repeating from the depths of my heart: 'Save her! Save her without his speaking!' Who is he—the murderer? Take him and shut his mouth. But M. Darzac made it clear that in order to shut his mouth he must be killed. Have I the right to kill Mlle. Stangerson's murderer? No, I had not. But let him only give me the chance! Let me find out whether he is really a creature of flesh and blood! Let me see his dead body, since it cannot be taken alive.

"If I could but make this woman, who does not even look at us, understand! She is absorbed by her fears and by her father's distress of mind. And I can do nothing to save her. Yes, I will go to work once more and accomplish wonders.

"I move toward her. I would speak to her. I would entreat her to have confidence in me. I would, in a word, make her understand—she alone—that I know how the murderer escaped from the yellow room, that I have guessed the motives for her secrecy, and that I pity her with all my heart. But by her gestures she begged us to leave her alone, expressing weariness and the need for immediate rest. M. Stangerson asked us to go back to our rooms and thanked us. Frederic Larsan and I bowed to him, and, followed by Daddy Jacques, we regained the gallery. I heard Larsan murmur: 'Strange! Strange!' He made a sign to me to go with him into his room. On the threshold he turned toward Daddy Jacques.

Family Pedigrees.

Speaking to the students in an Englishwomen's college, an educator said: "Dig out all your family skeletons. Your relatives will probably be annoyed, but dig them out and face them. Make out your pedigree, tracing your family back to your great-grandparents and their brothers and sisters. By this means you can learn what traits to avoid and what diseases to guard against. It takes time, tact and temper to hunt back to the record of one's family, but it is worth it. Two men may seem the same, yet one man may hand down disease and crime to his descendants, while the other may hand down only those qualities that are good."

The Hunter and the Guide.

Every year there go into the wilderness thousands of hunters with the trappings and accoutrements of slaughter. Some of them come back. Parts of some of them come back. There is great carnage in the woods—not wholly among the wild animals. It is considered cheap sport to shoot a guide, as his skin is no good. Yet when there is nothing else in sight what can a hunter do? The usual method of the sportsman is as follows: There is a rustling in the bushes. The hunter levels his rifle at the spot and pours thirteen slugs into it. Then he shouts, "Is that you, guide?" There is seldom an answer.

His Hard Luck.

His horse went dead, and his mule went lame, and he lost six cows in a poker game; then a hurricane came on a summer's day and blew the house where he lived away, and the earthquake came when that was gone and swallowed the land that the house was on; then the tax collector came around and charged him up with the hole in the ground.

WHEN YOU ARE SICK

It doesn't take a good doctor to tell that — most any one could do that much, but to tell exactly the nature of the disease sometimes calls for the utmost skill of the Physician. Most anybody by a few simple tests could tell that your eyesight was defective and that you needed glasses of some kind, but to diagnose the exact trouble and fit the right glasses calls for more than ordinary skill.

We have made that one thing a study for years, and we are in business to bring wrong eyes and right glasses together. Satisfaction Guaranteed.

Properties of Central Ontario Power Co. Not for Sale

Port Hope, June 27.—The power merger on the Trent River and at Peterborough, mentioned in the Toronto press to-day, does not include all the companies mentioned. J. A. Culverwell, of Port Hope, managing director of the Central Ontario Power Co., owners of Burleigh Falls and Buckhorn Falls, located just north of Peterborough, states emphatically that their properties are not for sale, neither have they been offered for sale, nor will they be offered for sale, as his company will develop them.

As regards the Healey Falls property and some of the other powers mentioned, at least those owned by another company, in which Mr. Culverwell is interested, this gentleman has no statement to make whatever.

HAAG SHOWS HERE TO-DAY

The Mighty Haag Shows are here.

The small boy as well as many of the older ones are happy. The big train load of mysteries arrived in the city early this morning from Orillia. Two performances will be given in the large waterproof tents on the grounds opposite the King Edward school and while the visitors do not lay claim to be the biggest on earth, the adjective mighty, is the proper one to use, in speaking of the pretentiousness of the exhibition as given by the army of performers. The Haag shows have never failed to please and those who pay a visit to the show grounds may be assured of witnessing a good clean performance. The Japanese troupe, the trapeze and aerial performances, are second to none, and the trained animals occupy a similar position.

The parade this morning attracted large crowds as it wound its way through the principal streets.

King George V., the baby camel, born at Welland, was the centre of much interest.

Billy Zimmerman, the glad hand flinger with the shows, speaks highly of the manner of the greatment received. this being the first visit to Canada.

The Ladies' Aid of St. Jame's Church will hold a Strawberry Social at the home of Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Robinson, (Sandy Nook Garden) on evening of June 30th. Good programme will be provided. Admission 15 cents including Strawberries and Cream.

SAID FAREWELL TO REV. PEARSON

Rev. E. A. Pearson, before leaving the city, was not forgotten bo the Methodist members of the Bowling Association.

On the bowling green yesterday afternoon, about four o'clock, he was made the recipient of a splendid pair of bowls, presented to him by his Methodist fellow-bowlers.

Mr. Edwin Pratt read the following address, and Mr. D. Belleghem made the presentation. The address read: To Rev. E. A. Pearson, City.

Dear Sir,—As members of your church, who have been associated with you on the bowling green, we could not let you go without expressing to you our deep regret at your departure from our midst to take up your work elsewhere. as we will surely miss you in our games.

We ask you to accept this pair of bowls as a small token of our feelings towards you, and trust that they may be a reminder to you of the many pleasant games we have had on the green together.

With best wishes for yourself and family.

(Signed) T. EDWIN PRATT,
R. J. SODEN,
D. BELLEGHEM,
G. E. MARSHALL,
G. A. CARRUTHERS.

Mr. Pearson was greatly surprised, but made a modest reply, assuring the donors that he would always remember them with pleasure, and carry with him kind memories of the Peterborough Bowling Club.

A $5000 Challenge

An interesting controversy is being indulged in on the Upper Lakes in connection with the relative speed of the S.S. 'Hamonic' of the Northern Navigation Co. and the S.S. "Keewatin," of the Canadian Pacific Railway. It is claimed by the latter that it has been demonstrated she could speed faster than the S.S. 'Hamonic,' and the Sarnia 'Canadian' has challenged two of their contemporaries that the steamer "Hamonic," the first time she comes across either the 'Keewatin' or the 'Assiniboia' of the C.P.R. line will pass these vessels, and in good faith have deposited a certified cheque for $500.00.

WHEN JENNY LIND SANG.

A Nightingale That Charmed Hearts as Well as Ears.

Nothing in Richard Hoffman's musical recollections is more charming than his description of Jenny Lind.

"She would trip on and off," he says, "as if in an ecstasy of delight at the opportunity of singing, bowing and smiling to her audience and giving every one present a flattering sense of contributing in a measure toward the success of the evening. She had three or four songs which showed the wondering compass and power of her voice, and one or more of these were called for at every concert—a Swedish echo song in which she would echo her own voice by a sort of ventriloquism that was quite marvelous and another in which she made a remarkable diminuendo, reaching a pianissimo as faint as a sigh, but with a carrying power that made it distinctly audible at the most extreme limits of Castle Garden or Tripler Hall, where the later concerts were given.

"This was a fine building situated at Broadway and Bond street and just finished in time for the second series of concerts. The hall had fine acoustic advantages, and it was a great loss to New York when it was destroyed by fire a few years later. The Winter Garden was afterward built on the same site.

"One of the most haunting things to me was her singing of Taubert's bird song, 'I Know Not Why I Am Singing.' Her shake was the finest I ever heard, so close and even as to be altogether perfect. Her voice, which she said herself was naturally stiff and stubborn, she had educated and practiced into such a degree of perfection that her roulades and cadenzas were unparalleled in their execution.

"In her sacred songs she rose to the sublime, and on one occasion as she finished singing the aria 'I Know That My Redeemer Liveth' I recollect that Daniel Webster, who was seated in the centre of the balcony, rose from his seat and made her a profound bow. Her rapt expression of face and never ending volume of voice made her appear like some inspired seraph delivering a divine message.

"She was indebted to Sir George Smart, with whom she had studied in England, for all the traditional renderings of oratorio parts, he being at that time the greatest living authority in this school of music, but her vocal training was done under Manuel Garcia in Paris."

A Smallpox Scare.

The pluck of Sir Harry Johnston, the famous explorer—who has lately been elected a corresponding member of the Italian Geographical Society "in recognition of his research work in Africa"—is unquestioned, but strategem has got him out of many a tight corner. On one occasion his zareba was surrounded by a howling mob of savages, who sent an envoy asking him to surrender. Sir Harry merely told the envoy that they had smallpox in the camp, and a wretched albino was trotted out as the awful example. Five minutes later the scared tribesmen were busy putting as large a stretch of Africa as time would permit between themselves and danger. As Sir Harry well knew, they were more afraid of "the white disease" than they were of all the inventions of Maxim.

The Proper Place to Look.

During the moving a portrait of one of the ancestors of the Brent family had got lost. No one could find it at either the old or the new house, and there was great consternation. William Brent, aged six, was offered a "treat," value not announced, for any hint that would lead to the return of the missing grandfather. One noon he came home from school breathless.

"I think, mamma," he said—"I think we can find Grandfather Trent's picture."

"Where?" asked his mother.

"Downtown," said William confidently. "I saw a notice on a shop window, and it said 'Paintings Restored Within'."

A Delicate Compliment.

To be able to compliment without seeming to flatter is a rare gift, and probably no race of men is endowed with that gift more entensively than the French.

An example of the Frenchman's rare tact in matters of this sort is shown in that sweet little story of a man who had ventured to compliment a white haired old lady upon her beauty.

"Ah," said she, "I fear you flatter me. You call me pretty! Why, I am an old woman, my hair is white, and, see, here is a wrinkle."

"A wrinkle?" he replied. "Never, madame. That is not a wrinkle. It is but a smile that has drifted from its moorings."

His Bad Words.

An old woman in an English village took a strange dislike to the new rector and expressed the hope that his stay would be short. On being asked why she had such a rooted objection to him she replied:

"'Ow could I 'elp it when 'e uses such bad words in the pulpit?"

"But what bad words?" she was asked.

"Just think," was her reply, "'ow often 'e says peradventure, and you knows what David says about such like—'If I shall say peradventure the darkness shall cover me.'"

A Reminder.

Small Edgar's mother had invited a few friends to tea, and the little fellow was warned to be on his best behavior. The conversation having become quite animated at the table, Edgar was forgotten. A few moments later his mother asked the servant for a plate, when Edgar said: "You can have mine, mamma. There ain't nothing on it."

Italian Peasants.

The diet of an Italian peasant is composed of black bread, beans, cabbages, onions and wild herbs, with a small quantity of inferior oil, fruit and macaroni. Tea, sugar and other similar commodities are absolutely unknown to the Italian field worker.

R. B. Stack, out on $10,000 bail at his son, has forfeited his bail because of failure to appear in court.

BERTHA SPENCER'S TRIBUTE

The Strange Way in Which Frank Williams' Memorial Day Plan Worked Out

BY ARTHUR MORGAN LANGWORTHY

(Copyright, 1910, by the New York Herald Co. All rights reserved.)

A FEW days before Memorial Day Frank Williams came to see Jim Spencer. Jim wasn't home, but his fourteen-year-old sister, Bertha, was, and the bright, pretty little girl quickly noticed how grave Frank looked.

"What makes you so serious?" she asked, sympathetically.

"Am I? Perhaps it's because I've been thinking about a plan for Memorial Day and I wanted to know what Jim thought of it. My! how fine your school garden is!" exclaimed Frank, changing the subject. He could see the tiny flower bed through the window.

"I've been real successful, but I guess it's only because our soil is so rich," answered Bertha, modestly.

Reverently Laid Them in the Little Boat.

"It's the best school garden of all!" cried Frank, admiringly, "and I'll tell you something you don't know, too! I wouldn't say this to some girls, but you never get 'stuck' on yourself. I overheard Mr. Nelson tell old Hackett that your garden looked like a prize winner!"

"Did he really say that?" she asked, while her face flushed happily. Mr. Nelson was one of the Board of Trustees who governed the affairs of the academy. And as for the school garden, this was a new and interesting way of teaching the pupils more about nature, both practical and beautiful.

On a certain day seeds were distributed to all the girls and to the smaller boys. Some were vegetable seeds, others floral. They were to be planted in tiny box gardens. No limit was placed on the size of the box, except that it must be small enough to be loaded into the farm wagon the school would send to cart it to the academy.

June 1 was to be the great day when the Board of Trustees inspected the gardens and awarded the prizes. So you can now understand how happy Frank's news made Bertha. Unfortunately, some jealousy broke out among the various contestants on account of the keen rivalry among them. The girls showed it particularly, and now Bertha suddenly understood why Clara Wilkins and others had been so mean to her lately right after seeing her garden. This realization took away part of her happiness.

Finally Jim came in. Frank didn't say anything at first, but pointed at the portrait hanging over the parlor mantel. It showed a tall, fine looking man dressed in the uniform of a Union naval officer of the civil war. Below the picture hung a faded photograph, from which the painting was evidently a copy.

"Jim," said Frank, still eying the portrait, "my granduncle and your grandfather lost their lives fighting side by side on the Mississippi. I've a plan to honor them both on Memorial Day in a way that has never been done here before; it is a new memorial ceremony I've read about that applies to sailors who have lost their lives in action on the water—and—and didn't come back," concluded Frank solemnly.

Then Frank explained his plan to Jim, who instantly agreed to help him carry out the idea. Frank became so absorbed in its details that he forgot he had another listener. Bertha never left the room, but heard every word, and when Frank departed she went over to the portrait of her grandfather and looked at it for a long time while she pondered over the story the picture told.

Two months after he sat for the photograph Captain Spencer was ordered to run his gunboat past strong Confederate batteries on the lower Mississippi one dark night. The enemy tried to repulse the attempt by sending huge flaming fire rafts against the Union fleet. All the Union vessels cleared them safely except Captain Spencer's ship.

The Captain found it necessary to go upon the vessel's unprotected upper deck in order to better direct her course. He was accompanied by his first officer, Lieutenant Frank Williams (Frank was named after him). The two men made a perfect target in the glare of the burning raft and finally, after calmly standing exposed to a hail of bullets from the rebel sharpshooters on the river bank, both were hit simultaneously and fell—not on the deck but overboard to their last resting place—the waters of the Mississippi River. Yet not before they had saved their ship!

The beach at Williams' Cove was lined with Frank's schoolmates late on Memorial Day afternoon. Williams' Cove is a stretch of sandy beach marking part of the river boundary of the Williams farm. More than one grown-up had joined the little crowd, and there were even several faded uniforms that marked their aged wearers as war veterans.

All seemed interested in the object that lay so close to the water's edge. It was hard to make out the form of the tiny canvas craft on account of its overflowing fragrant cargo. For its burden consisted of flowers which quite filled the little boat. And every now and then some new arrival added more.

The time for the beginning of the ceremony began to draw near. At last Frank Williams stepped out of the crowd and spoke in a low clear voice. He told of reading about this new ceremonial in honor of those who fought upon the waters and never returned.

Then Frank related the stories of those gallant heroes they had gathered to honor now. This flower laden craft, filled with tributes to these heroes, was about to be launched upon the waters of their river, whose waters went to make up the mighty Mississippi—which was their last resting place. Thus was found a fitting means of honoring the missing.

Having finished this brief speech, Frank was about to push the memorial craft into the water, while every one stood with bowed head uncovered. Suddenly he heard a familiar voice break the silence:—

"Wait, Frank! Wait!" and then Bertha Spencer ran up the beach to him, holding out two armfuls of beautiful flowers. She knelt down and reverently laid them in the little boat. Then Frank cast it off and it floated away on the swift current running close to shore at this point.

But Bertha Only Blushed and Hung Her Head When They Questioned Her

They silently watched it until the last rays of the setting sun showed only a mere speck on the fast darkening river, when the wake of a passing steamer swamped the fragile memorial craft and its floral offering was scattered far and wide over the water. Then the group of watchers broke into little knots and walked home, to talk of the two heroes and their bravery.

The next day was the first of June. All the morning the farm wagons provided by the trustees had been delivering their fragrant loads at the academy. The pupils were allowed to inspect them at noon recess. Frank took pains to be among the number, because he liked Bertha Spencer and wanted to see her garden. He hoped it would win, as he knew, too, how badly some of her jealous schoolmates had treated her.

Frank left the school garden exhibition half an hour later with a very puzzled face. He met Jim Spencer, who had just returned from lunch at home.

"Say, Jim, had the wagon come for Bertha's garden when you left?"

"What do I know about it?" asked Jim rather contemptuously. He preferred to leave all that sort of thing to girls and "sissies." Raising flowers wasn't Jim's idea of manliness.

"Oh, here comes Bertha now, I'll ask her," exclaimed Frank, spying Bertha walking up the road.

"Yes, the wagon came, Frank," answered Bertha in response to Frank's question.

"Then, where's your garden?" demanded Frank, pointing toward the academy.

"I haven't any garden, Frank," said Bertha, coloring and looking away.

"Say, you're the worst ninny I ever heard of!" cried Frank, angry in spite of himself. "Why, you'd won sure if you'd sent—but it's too late now. The Board of Trustees will all be here in ten minutes.

"Yes, it's too late," agreed Bertha, but her eyes looked too bright and her lips trembled. Frank didn't want to make her cry, but he still wished to know why she didn't send.

"You've just got to tell me why you didn't send!" he demanded.

At first Bertha shook her head obstinately, but Frank was so insistent that she finally blurted out:—

"Well, if you must know, I took my flowers somewhere else!"

"Somewhere else? When?" cried the mystified Frank.

"Yesterday. Oh, Frank, don't you see, I just couldn't let Memorial Day go by without doing something for dear grandfather—not after what I hear of your plans. But I was so selfish it took me all day before I decided, and then I was most too late. But I arrived with them all before you sent the little boat away—and—and, Frank, I don't regret losing the prize, not one single bit!" And, judging from Bertha's shining face, she spoke the truth.

Frank was stunned; he had never dreamed Bertha had done this.

"Besides, Frank, I'm glad for another reason, too. Maybe the others won't be so mean when they find I didn't exhibit," added Bertha.

Frank caught Bertha's hands and nearly "Bertha, you're the greatest little brick I know!" was all he could say, and then the school bell rang. Bertha was intercepted at the door by both Mr. Nelson (who had arrived early) and Mr. Hackett, the principal. Frank waited behind and saw them talking to her with great evident displeasure. But Bertha only blushed and hung her head when they questioned her.

"She won't tell 'em even now, and it's an awful shame—and all my fault!" he exclaimed savagely to himself.

Finally the judges selected the prize winners behind the locked doors of the exhibition hall, which in reality was the large double classroom on the top floor. The whole school filed into the hall, now turned into a huge indoor flower and vegetable garden. Huge clusters of forget-me-nots vied with glorious banks of red roses, English daisies, vivid patches of purple pansies and several varieties of wild flowers lined the walls, while the vegetable arrays did credit to the sturdy farm boys and girls who grew them.

The Board of Trustees sat in an imposing half circle on the platform. Mr. Hackett rapped for order, and amid breathless silence the names of the two prize winners, floral and vegetable classes, were read out. Grace Kenyon grew the best crop of vegetables and the floral garden prize went to Clara Wilkins.

There was a lot of applause, but Bertha's schoolmates were puzzled. She had been conceded to be the winner, and here she was smilingly applauding her rival's success—and not even exhibiting.

Now, all the while these events were happening something else was going on. Frank was strongly affected by what Bertha had told him. He blamed himself, however unjustly, for Bertha's loss of the prize, and that thought so preyed upon his mind that by the time the presentation ceremonies were over he couldn't stand it any longer.

Mr. Hackett was about to dismiss the school when Frank slowly rose from his seat. His face was as red as a beet and his voice trembled so at first that he could hardly speak as he asked permission "to make a little explanation."

"Gentlemen of the Board of Trustees, it—it doesn't seem right for me to keep still any longer. I—I must tell you the true reason why Miss Bertha Spencer's exhibit is not here. It is only justice to Bertha that you should know, as I'm sure she refused to tell you herself."

Everybody turned to glance at Bertha, who looked panic stricken at Frank's daring move. Frank had recovered his voice by this time, and as he was a good speaker, he told the story of Bertha's "tribute" in a very convincing, simple manner. At the beginning they listened in an astonished silence that presently gave way to first a handclap and then a steady interruption of applause until he finished—when the boys actually cheered!

And the next thing Bertha knew she was almost carried up on the platform, while the school trustees congratulated her. Finally when Bertha had been led back to her seat and the school had quieted down the Board was observed putting its heads together in close conference. The dignified body smiled broadly at the end of this mysterious discussion, and the smile became a chuckle when Mr. Nelson stepped forward and announced:—

We're very fond of music,

But no one seems to like our songs.
What's the reason why?

PLANETARY CONJUNCTION

Dooryard Bird Shelters.

BOYS who have never erected bird houses in their yards have missed a great deal of pleasure and should be sure to put some up this year. There are various sized bird houses for various birds, but among them should be a small bird house for a wren, with a door so small that the sparrows cannot get in. Perhaps you may be able to lure a wren to come and board with you, which is very desirable indeed. When you have put up your bird houses you must be sure to offer other inducements to attract the feathered throng in the way of scattered crumbs and other food which they like. But you should arrange a "trolley system so that you can dump the crumbs on the threshold of their houses, out of reach of the cats, which usually prowl in a yard frequented by the birds. Be sure to put the bird houses up on poles, where the cats cannot climb.

LIKED WIT OF ARTEMUS WARD

Londoners for a Wonder Appreciated Work of Great American Humorist.

On the occasion of Artemus Ward's professional visit to London, which occurred not long before his death, J. E. Preston Muddock says in his book, "Pages from an Adventurous Life," that the American humorist's advertisements of his "show" were as full of funny surprises as the lectures themselves. One that tickled the general public was this:

Artemus Ward Delivered Lectures Before All the Crowned Heads of Europe Ever Thought of Delivering Lectures.

And an excerpt from his lecture on "Drawing," is quoted by Mr. Muddock as a particularly delightful bit.

"I haven't distinguished myself as an artist," Ward said, in his inimitable way, "but have always been mixed up in art. I have an uncle who takes photographs in his sane moments, and I have a servant who takes everything he can lay his hands on at any moment.

"At a very tender age I could draw on wood. When a mere child I once drew a small cart-load of raw turnips over a wooden bridge. It was a raw morning. The people of the village recognized me. They said it was a raw-turnip drawing. That shows how faithfully I had copied nature. I drew their attention to it, so you see there was a lot of drawing in it.

"The villagers, with wonderful discernment peculiar to villagers, said I had a future before me. As I was walking backward when I made my drawing I replied that I thought that my future must be behind me."

CROW WORRIED THE GOLFERS

Bird of Fastidious Tastes Would Swoop Down and Steal Only the New Balls.

The crow seems to be attracted to golf balls in a way wholly peculiar from the rest of the bird species. In parks where the rook and the crow abound one can notice them sitting in the trees or hopping about the putting greens in the distance watching the ball with a direct or sidelong glance expressive of the keenest interest and curiosity, which is soon translated into a desire to carry it off to the roost in the neighboring wood.

The Kew gardens adjoin the Mid-Surrey course, and in the royal preserve there used to be a fairly large colony of crows nesting among the trees. Of this colony there was one particular crow who found his greatest amusement in mingling among the golfers and in disconcerting their play by indulging in repeated predatory campaigns against their golf balls.

His policy was to hover in attendance on those players who used new white balls only. Those on which the paint had been chipped or which had been used in play for several rounds by an economical player were always rejected by this particular bird as being beneath his fastidious attention.—From the Field.
